BISMARCK'S SUCCESSOR. Caprivi's Achievements and His Likeness to the Prince. Berlin correspondent of the don Times sends his journal the following sketch of General von Caprivi, the new chancellor of the German "General George von Caprivi de Caprera de Montecucculi, to give him his full title, is now in his fifty-ninth year, hav ing been born at Berlin, February 24 1831. His father, descended from an illustrious Italian stock, was a high legal functionary in the service of the Prussian state. Entering a general regiment in his eighteenth year, he won rapid promotion and served with distinction in the campaigns of 1864 and 1866. In 1870 he acted as chief the staff to the Tenth corps, of which he is now commander, and reaped fresh laurels in all the battles of the Loire. Swiftly ascending the other steps of the military ladder, he was appointed in 1833 to the command of the Thirtieth division at Metz, and next year, passing at a single bound from the army to the navy, he ter's retirement from the head of the ad mirality. "In a short time naval men by profes sion were amazed at the mastery of their art and the perception of their interests which were displayed by a mere landsman and soldier like Von Caprivi, and his administration conclusively proved at least that here was a man with a rare power of adapting himself to new modes and lines of activity, a faculty which will render less strange and less danger ous his impending transition from soldiering to diplomacy and statesmanship. Soon after the present emperor's acces sion, on the death of Count Monts, he reorganized the navy, the command the imperial fleet being vested in Admiral von der Goltz, while something like a ministry of marine was created under Rear Admiral von Heusner; and it was on this occasion that General von Caprivi, sharing in the redistribution of military commands, returned to his first love and was rewarded for his loyalty thereto no less than for his naval services with the Tenth or Hanoverian army corps, which is one of the finest in succeeded Herr von Stosch on the lat the whole army. "During the maneuvers of last autumn, when the Hanoverians and Westphalians met in mimic warfare, with smokeless powder and other innovations on their trial, the emperor had opportunity enough anew to study the character of General von Caprivi, and this gen eval's character and ability to serve him convinced his his majesty, otherwise he would never have asked him to assume the enormous burden of responsibility which Prince Bismarck has now laid down. It was not without grave scruples and self-distrust that General von Caprivi listened to the flattering proposals of the emperor; but his majesty, as it is said, finally decided to have a soldier for his new chancellor, thinking, as he does, with Frederick the Great that a general must be the surest conductor of a foreign policy, as knowing best how far he can go with the army behind him. "But, though a soldier of the first order, General von Caprivi, in the opin-ion of all who know him, is much more than a soldier, and, if personal appearance is to count for anything, he must be a man of great force of character and will, combining in a high degree the sanviter in mode with the fortiter in re, blending sagacity with patience, resolu tion with good humor, and German thoroughness with southern fire. The new German chancellor looks a typical Teuton of the hugest and most impressive type. He might well pass for a brother, or even a double, of Prince Bismarck himself, the personal likeness be-tween the two men being most remarkable. In point, indeed, of stature and breadth of shoulders General von Caprivi even has the advantage of the man he is going to succeed, but otherhe is characterized same massive jaw, heavy gray mus-tache and bushy eye-brows, thick neck, solid square head, shrewd, penetrating glance, and general air of blood and iron, tempered with the positive suavity of a niceteenth century statesman. "A difference in the character of the two men might by some be discerned in their walk, for, while Prince Bismarck treads sharply and heavily like a trooper, the gait of General von Caprivi has something in it of deliberation and leisurely elegance, while not lacking either in verve or emphasis. He is a good enough speaker, but a brief one, and when at the head of the admirality he never failed, from his place on the federal council bench in the reichstag, to put his case clearly and well. Indeed it may be said that it was his tenure of office at the admirality which enabled him to become acquainted with the internal machinery of the imperial government to a degree that will render his novitiate as chancellor comparatively easy."

AN UP-COUNTRY GHOST. A Strange Sight Witnessed by a Man

Returning from a Dance. News of one of the most interesting ghost stories ever heard in upper De-Kalb county has just been brought to light here, says a Smithville, Tenn., special to the Nashville American. The facts are about as follows: Last Tuesday night a young man, returning from a neighborhood dance, where he had been partaking too freely of tanglefoot, saw the uncouth sight. About I o'clock he took the lonely road for home, which runs through a dark woodland, surrounded by deep vales and lofty peaks, and overhung with huge cliffs, whose summits are crowned with gigantic pines. Not a clearing disturbs the thickness of the woodland, save one solitary spot almost overgrown with vines and shrubs, where stands moldering an old stone building with decayed and ruined walls and lofty towers, almost overgrown with mess, resembling greatly the old haunted Kirk Alloway, so famous in Tam O'Shanter.

All these scenes combined could not daunt the courage of the young mountaineer as he marched on with quickening pace. But just as he was approaching the old haunted building, which has for many years been frequented by the ghost of a mysterious old lady, who many years ago suddenly disappeared, as an old fireside legend has it, and took up her abode in the vaults of this old building, which was anciently used by a band of exile monks, and thought to have been built by them at least a cen-tury ago, and which has for many years been hidden from public notice unvisited for a long time by any human being. There suddenly rising from the ground, like the ghost of Bauquo, appeared before him a tall, dark apparition with outstretched hands and glowing eyes revolving in their sockets, and tangled gray hair, wharing a loose robe descending from shoulder to feet. The boy stood amazed, motionless and dumb This scene lasted but for a moment. The ghost as suddenly disappeard, Re cognizing his situation the boy immediately made a forward double quick at an almost incredible rate. Glancing over his shoulder he saw the old monastery lighted by candles which were held in the hands of a solemn procession of monks in their religious attire, as they treaded noiselessly around an iron coffin in the center of the floor. Upon the coffin were two candles, one upon the head, the other upon the foot. Each monk carried a cross of his order and they were chanting an old English tune.

Upon the head of the coffin was a golden cross, and as each monk passed the cross he made a low bow and uttered some words of prayer. Suddenly all was dark and the terior part of the old monastery were heard to open and creak upon their rusty hinges, and then began a clicking of chains and a chaos of ghostly noise which was soon hushed, the vaulted doors shut with a slam. All was now silent and the owl again began his hooting and the wind was heard sighting through the pines No consideration could have kept the boy long at this lonely spot. He rushed onward and reached home almost unconscious. He aroused the family with his terrific cries and it was not until several applications of camphor were made that he was able to tell his story. Quite a number of men and boys vis ited the scene of the ghost last night to ascertain what they could of the lonely ghost habitation, but little was learned, however, except the place showed signs of recent mysterious habitation. A PRAYER-BOOK PARADE.

Madge's Breezy Picture of a London Promenade After Church. We went to prayer-book parade on Sunday after church, and took note chiefly of the prevalent muddiness of boots. The ground was in a sadly sloppy state. Some of the women hitched up their skirts in the back with varying de grees of ungracefulness, writes "Madge" in London Truth. Others allowed their garments to train, regardless of the muddy doom that awaited them. There were some remarkable objects to be seen One was a girl in a short gown of the most portentious check in vivid green and white. Her frock suggested a lawn marked out in tennis courts. Another was an ancient dame in a divided skirt, Lady Feodore Sturt was one of the numerous very tall girls, her long mantle, with its hanging sleeves and high collar, making her look still taller. Lady Conber's black lace over shot-silk looked summerlike. Her daughter wore a tan redingote lined with pale blue, and had pale blue sash fastened on one side Her black hat was very becoming. crowd was a thin one—owing, possibly, to the unmitigated damp of the weather and the raw cold of the atmosphere. Neither of these, however, prevented a girl from wearing a thin white gown unlined, and invested with a spurious air of wintriness by the addition of bands o brown velvet laid on here and there Two sisters looked thinly clad in gray kirts of the clinging order, at they clutched one-sidedly in an effort to wade the mud. They had gray capes with gimp feills. A costume in the oldnew pontifical violet made its mark; so did an olive-green trimmed with beaver and gold passementerie; a rough woolen, fleeked with ones of red, green and oldgold, and a red dress with rows of black braid round the skirt, black fur collar and epaulets and black velvet sleeves.
