Donald Burns is a dealer in birds and animals and has lately added a young chimpanzee to his collection. Mr. Burns received word from Boston a few days since that the captain of a sailing vessel which had just arrived there from the west coast of Africa had a chimpanzee for sale. Burns accordingly went to Boston to see the animal, and finding it a good this city, says a New York special to the San Francisco examiner.

The animal, it seems, is very tame, and while on shipboard learned many tricks, such as using a fan and cating with a knife and fork. The captain's wife had made the chimpanzee a child's dress and hat.

The appearance of the animal in these togs was ludicrous in the extreme, the creature looking for all the world like an ordinary but very homely little col-

Mr. Burns was at a loss how to transport it to this city, but finally concluded to dress it up and bring it down by train in one of the passenger coaches. One night Mr. Burns, accompanied by the chimpanzee, took seats in a smoker on one of the trains of the New York. New Haven & Hartford railroad, bound for New York. To all appearances he had a little colored girl with him, and when the conductor came around for the tickets and asked for the "girl's" fare there was a general roar among the passengers sit. ting near by, who had discovered the nature of Burns' companion. "This isn't any child," said Mr. Buens. 'You don't call a child as big as that a lady, do you?" asked the conductor, "Come, now," said he, becoming impatient and feeling rather nettled at the laughter on all sides of him. "You'll have to pay half fare anyhow. "But I tell you," said Burns, "that it isn't a child." At this point the chimpanzee, which had apparently been listening with interest to the conversation, turned its face up to the conductor and grinned. "Holy Moses!" exclaimed the startled official. "Why, I'm blessed if that isn't a monkey." This was too much for the conductor, who didn't recover from his astonishment for the rest of the trip.

The Diseases of Vegetables. The United States department of agri-culture has just it sued bulletin No. 11 of the section of vegetable pathology. This publication, prepared by B. T. Galloway, chief of the section, is a report on the experiments made in 1889 in the treatment of several important plant dis-

CHROS. The work was carried on in nine states, embracing nearly every variety of soil and climate and the results as set forth are as a whole highly encouraging, despite the fact that the season was one of the worst ever known for fungus diseases of all kinds. The diseases under treatment were scab, rust and bitter-rot of the apple; powdery mildew, downy mildew, lenf-blight, anthracnose and black-rot of the grape; leaf-blight of the pear; leaf-blight, rust and fire-blight of the quince; leaf-blight of the strawberry; rust and leaf-blight of the blackberry; rot and blight of the potato, tomate and melon.

Considerable space is devoted to a summary of volunteer reports on vine diseases from which it appears that nearly every one who followed the di-rections laid down by the department succeeded in saving the greater part of their crop. From all accounts it would seem that the Bordeaux mixture containing 6 pounds of copper and 4 pounds of lime to 22 gallons of water is still the most reliable remedy for grape diseases.
The results, bowever, of the treatment with the ammoniacal carbonate of copper solution are highly encouraging and lead to the belief that in ordinary seasons it will be the cheapest, most de-able and effective remedy. One act-vantage it possesses over the Bordeaux mixture, is that it does not sour the fruit, which is a matter of importance, especially where the grapes are used for the table. Mr. Galloway suggests that the Bordeaux mixture is used for the first three treatments after which the ammoniacal solution be substituted for the rest of the season. Apple scab was treated in Wisconsin and Michigan with remarkably satisfactory results, the best remedies being the ammoniacal solution and modified cau celeste. By the application of these preparations at a total cost of 25 cents per tree, the yield of fruit free from scab was from 60 to 75 per cent greater than on trees of the same variety not treated. The bulletin gives a detailed account of the entire work describing the methods of preparing and applying the remedies, cost of the various treatments, etc., and concludes with a paper on the amount of copper in wines made from treated grapes, and the hygic nic questions this

New Novel-"Th eBell of St. Paul's," by Walter Besant, has rapidly attained a large and descrued popularity. In it the author says, "This is an age of Apollinaris water"— a very true remark, seeing that no less than 15,822,000 bottles were filled at the Apollinaris Spring in the year 1889!
