ONE OF NAPOLEON'S MEN.

How He Left Some of His Master's Finery in Western Pennsylvania. Writing of the settlement of the north. western part of Pennsylvania, a Pitts-ourg Dispatch contributor says: The sober, plodding pleneers were now and then waked up by the appearance in their midst of people about whom there was the interest of mystery or the charm of romance. On a slip in Land Agent Gaskell's book, interlaced between the mention of "a panther measuring eleven feet from tip to tip which Adam Dong shot yesterday," and an account of David Postlethwait's entrance into a den of wolves back of his place the fall before, which he says in parenthesis (was a far braver feat than that of "Old Put"), he makes brief reference to a certain Colonel Egmont and his wife, who appeared in Upper Jeffer-son in the earliest days. There is no date to the slip, but the Egmonts must have arrived about 1816. This is their story as nearly as it can be recalled:

Col. Egmont had charge of Napoleon's traveling chariot and baggage van at Waterloo. When the battle was lost and the flight was on, the emperor expressed the hope that he might find passage on an American ship. Egmont said with the expectation of joining his chief in the United States, he, with the help of some soldiers, got out of the van attached to the carriage, such boxes of plate, linen, etc., as could be hastily seized, and barely escaping capture, made his way to the coast and got on a schooner bound for America. He did not know the emperor had been intercepted and put on board the Bellerophon until he landed in New York, and as he had not received his pay, and the emperor was then on his way to St. Helena, he concluded to make the goods supply his temporary necessities. He waited in New York until his wife arrived from Bordeaux. He sold some things before he left the city, and with the rest he and his wife came into the woods. With the little money he had be engaged from the agent a small, partly improved farm up the Mahouing Creek, but knew nothing of labor. Some of the table linen in his possession, was of exquisite fineness, and had the letter "N" surmounted bp the imperial crown embroidered on each

After Mme Egmont had carefully picked out the embroidery she sold part of it to some appreciative housewives near the agency who had seen better days. An old lady, whose daughter still has several napkins, said that the outlines of the N and crown were plainly visible after several washings. Egmont, as well as his wife, seemed always anxious and on the alert. Their cabin was kept carefully closed and the contents of several chests were never displayed, but the use of several richly chased gold drinking cups, in the tender hospitality to some neighbors who had been kind to them, led to the belief that the chests contained valuable plate belonging to Napoleon. To the refined and sensitive French woman the wildness and isolation of their retreat became insupportable. She so soon pined for sunny France that the place was suddenly disposed of and with few leave-takings, the Egmonts left Jefferson and were never heard of

"Tis strange, passing strange," that parents will let their children die with diptheria when it is a noted fact that Dr. Jefferis' preventive and cure never fails in any case. Twenty-five years' trial has proven it. No physician re-quired. Best references given. Prico $3. Address box 657, Omaha, Neb.

Terrible Famine in Galicia. Terrible distress prevails in Galicia owing to the failure of last year's crops, says a Vienna letter. There is a famine of food both for man and for beast, and the governor of the province has appealed to the authorities here for a special grant of 10,000,000 floring for the purpose of purchasing supplies for the starv-AGENTS WANTED to sell the PINLESS More than one hundred thousand horses have perished during the last few weeks from want of food. In the little district of Nisko alone over twenty-five hundred have died. On a meadow just outside the town of Dumbrowa there are ying the bodies of 400 horses which have starved to death. The other day a spec-ulator from Pesth took advantage of the state of affairs in Galicia to purchase a batch of 525 half-starved horses at the incredibly cheap price of 30 krentzers, or about 16 cents apiece, and 1,500 more were offered him at the same figure. Bread has vanished from the land, and the people are living almost exclusively on potatoes, and deem themselves fortunate when they can get even them. The horned cattle have likewise all perished, and milk and butter are not to be obtained for love or money. Under the circumstances it is not astonishing that the inhabitants are leaving the country in shoals and are emigrating to the Wealth Grown Fast. Wo Ah Woh was a young Chinese swell some years ago, says the New York Sun, and was one of the few fortunate ones who owned several thousands of American dollars. He invested a part of the money in a laundry supply store on Mott street, and had $1,750 left. He was afraid to intrust it to the banks. so he went to a rich Chinese jeweier and told him he wanted to see some of his best jade bracelets. He selected the most valuable, "How much?" he asked.

"Eight hundred dollars," was the red He beat the jeweler down and got 11 for $750. But there was yet another $1,000 left. This Wo invested in gold and diamond bracelets, which he word day and night on his left wrist. Thus he made his own left arm a savings 6,000 bank, reserving the right as a faithful grand to the institution on his left. Wo

was happy, and doled out shark's fin

Resently, in some mysterious way, Wo became hard up for ready each. After tossing upon his bank for several nights he findly concluded to draw on his bank.

account to the extent of the jade bracelet. But great was poor Wo's surprise when he found that he couldn't take it off. The ten years' extra avoirdupois had effectually imprisoned all his bank account between the clow and the wrist. To break the jade bracelet meant the loss of the whole $750. The other jewelled bracelets are all behind the jade, and Wo, although wealthy, is you
