

ONE OF THE SALES FRANK'S NECK

Eleven Jurors Tried to Send Him to the Gallows.

CLOSE OF THE CELEBRATED TRIAL.

Arrival of Hon. P. A. Collins, Chairman of the Last National Democratic Convention—His Trip West.

Old Patrick Brennan, spare built, white haired and white whiskered—but for his vote Tony Frank would be under a conviction of murder.

At the opening of court yesterday morning Judge Clarkson ordered the tenacious twelve brought before him.

"I take it that you are unable to agree upon a verdict," said the court.

"You are quite right," replied the foreman, Charles E. Silaboe.

"What prospect is there of an agreement?"

"The prospect is best understood, your honor, by the fact that we have been standing eleven to one pretty nearly since we started."

After meditating a moment or two, the judge asked Mr. Crowell, for the defense, if he had any objection to the jury being discharged, and the latter said he had not.

The same question was put to the prisoner, who at first failed to comprehend its meaning, but after a lengthy explanation from his counsel, surprisedly assented.

"I shall now take the responsibility of discharging you, gentlemen of the jury. The court takes pleasure in saying that it feels that each and every one of you has done his full duty, and only regrets that you should have been compelled to remain in session as long as you have. You are discharged."

The counsel for the defense took another objection and the prisoner was led back to his cell to await a new trial.

It required but little questioning to ascertain that the eleven were for murder in the first degree, and that one was for acquittal.

Foreman Silaboe stated that the jury representative that seventy-two ballots had been taken. The first stood eight for conviction and four for acquittal. Almost the next ballot changed to eleven for conviction and one for acquittal.

As noted above, the one man who could vote for conviction was Patrick Brennan.

One glance at his face, with his sharp chin and resolute mouth, is all that is necessary in order to show that he is just the man to prevail for a limited number of votes.

When spoken to regarding the record for endurance which he had made for himself, Mr. Brennan said simply that he did not believe the prisoner guilty, and would not have voted so, even if the jury had been kept out forever.

P. A. COLLINS OF MASSACHUSETTS

On His Way to the Coast He Stops Over in Omaha.

Hon. Patrick A. Collins of Boston arrived in Omaha yesterday morning on route to Portland, Seattle, Tacoma and other Northwestern points.

Mr. Collins is a distinguished lawyer and orator, has been a member of congress, presided over the last national democratic convention in St. Louis, and at one time it was thought would be selected for a position in the cabinet of President Cleveland.

He was not at the New hotel by Mayor Cushing, Postmaster Gallagher, John A. Creighton, James Creighton, Thomas Brennan, Frank R. Morrissey, Charles Conover and others, who gave him a hearty welcome and assured him of the pleasure it would afford them to make his visit to the city agreeable to him.

"Omaha has changed wonderfully since my last visit here," said Mr. Collins, "and I should judge from the general appearance of things that her prospects for becoming a great city are bright."

"When were you here last?"

"Twenty-one years ago this month. I purchased the first trans-continental ticket ever sold, and went across to San Francisco, and then across to St. Francisco, and then across to St. Francisco, and then across to St. Francisco."

"What do you think of the proposition on general principles, Mr. Collins?"

"Oh, bless your soul, it is a matter of politics entirely and was never so well contented."

"It doesn't interest you any more?"

"Yes, to a certain extent, but I am not speculating, predicting or taking any part in party issues. We have taught ourselves in Massachusetts to be conservative, to find out who and what the country wants. I don't believe that any one state has a right to dictate or demand when it has no goods to deliver."

"You are chairman of your state central committee?"

"That's a fact, and the headquarters are near my office; but I have only been in them four times since the first of January, and then solely to attend to business."

Mr. Collins could not be induced to state his preference on the presidential question.

"I am out," he declared, "on business matters that take me to Seattle, Tacoma and Portland. During the campaign, two years ago, I only made three speeches, and I may, if alive, make one or two the next time, but have actually given up politics."

Mr. Collins is a tall, slight, handsome gentleman forty-six years of age. His brown curly hair and mustache are turning gray.

He is accompanied by Mr. J. P. Noonan, a wealthy gentleman of Boston who makes the trip more for pleasure than anything else.

They are the guests while here of Mr. Brennan and will be given a lunch at the Union club today.
