

THE DAILY BEE. E. ROSEWATER, Editor. PUBLISHED EVERY MORNING. TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION. Daily and Sunday, One Year, $10.00...

COST OF CONGRESSIONAL DELAY. Some of the republican senators who have been most pronounced in opposition to any change in the rules of the senate...

It is a private matter with which they may do as they will, regardless of the consequences to the public. If state laws cannot effect this, and they have thus far failed, there must be national legislation to reach this matter...

APPLICANTS for pensions under recent laws should give the pension sharks a wide berth. It is a mistake to suppose that they can advance a claim or secure its allowance out of its regular order...

WYOMING. Foreigners are taking out naturalization papers in Cheyenne at the rate of ten a day. The heave-y at Sheridan has been seized by the internal revenue collectors for an alleged violation of the alcohol laws...

FROM THE STATE CAPITAL. An Old German Farmer South of Lincoln Assaulted by His Son. Several Hundred Dollars Worth of Valuable Silks Stolen - A Boy Has His Shoulder and Foot Crushed.

POLITICAL CHOW-CHOW. Now that Mr. Thompson of Grand Island has been nominated for congress in the Third district, the double-decker has a chance to try another straddle. The fulsome puffer which it has lavished on Mr. Keen of course cannot be recalled, but Mr. Thompson's name can be inserted where Keen's otherwise would have appeared.

THE BEE PUBLISHING COMPANY, PROPRIETORS. The Bee Publishing Company, Seventeenth St. State of Nebraska. George H. Tschuck, secretary of The Bee Publishing Company...

But the comfort and convenience of members of congress is a matter with which the public will have little concern. It is only interested in the question whether the delay in legislation is detrimental to the public interests, and it is not to be doubted that it is.

It is said that Senator Paddock desires to obtain statistics of the deposits of Nebraska farmers in the banks of this state, to be used in relating the often repeated statement that the farmers of Nebraska are paupers and that agriculture in the state has proven a failure.

The fifth annual fair of the Wyoming Fair association will be held at Cheyenne the third week in September. The premium lists are made out and ready for sale at prices of from one to five dollars.

The Harsh mine at Atlantic City, near Lander has been bonded to Denver parties for $10,000. The owners of the mine are to sink a fifty foot shaft and have the ore taken out. They will then be paid $1,000 and the privilege of taking the mine for $10,000.

NEWSPAPER AGENT. For the second time in the course of three months Newman's store has been burglarized of several hundred dollars worth of goods. The burglar's usual entrance through the rear window, and being dark inside they had things to do away with.

Among other distinguished politicians in the city, it must not be forgotten that the most hard-headed financier, David Butler, is here. He is accompanied by J. H. Craddock and Tobe Carter, who have just finished harvesting a crop of ice. These three gentlemen have attended every convention that has met so far this year, and Mr. Butler confesses that he has had a hard time with tears in his eyes, that he feared the farmers were not acting in harmony.

THE SUGAR TRUST PROPOSAL to change its name, but there is no probability that its character for greed will suffer thereby. Both parties are out with a complete roster of candidates in Wyoming, but there is a painful absence of a feminine gender on the tickets.

THE work of organization against mercenary assaults on the prosperity of Nebraska is progressing rapidly in Douglas county. Clubs have been formed in a majority of the wards and precincts, and numbers enrolled and their enthusiasm displayed shows that our citizens are alive to the necessity of defending their material interests.

A RIGID enforcement of the paving specifications, without fear or favor, is due to the property owners who foot the bills. Too much vigilance cannot be shown in protecting the city against scheming contractors.

GENERAL ALGER'S presidential boom is just now receiving a great deal of momentum among the veterans in attendance at the Grand Army reunion at Boston. But these early booms are liable to hatch prematurely.

THE cloud still lowers. Emperor William and Lord Salisbury have had a friendly conference, and still the frayed-out European war cloud refuses to disappear.

JUSTICE CLEGGAN'S court has been filled with a cloud of witnesses nearly all in attendance at a sharply contested case in which the cause of the death of a horse was the main point in dispute. Louis Peckley, the defendant, sold a horse to an Irishman named Murray, guaranteeing that he was sound.

CHARLEY BROWN predicted at 9 o'clock last evening that he would be in the city by Monday. He was in the city by Monday, and he was in the city by Monday. He was in the city by Monday, and he was in the city by Monday.

THE losses by fire in the United States were very heavy in the month of July, aggregating about $15,000,000. The losses for the year up to August 1 foot $62,310,000 against in 1889 $74,342,000 and in 1888 $76,693,250. There were 269 fires in July and many were large and expensive, causing heavy loss to insurance companies.

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."

THE common carrier is the subject of the New York Times finds in the strike on the New York Central and Hudson River railroads a text for some timely observations regarding the obligations of common carriers. It remarks that the officers of railroad companies "are too much disposed to treat the business under their control as if it were a purely private matter with which they can do as they will."