

LOVELY WOMAN AND PROGRESS

A Writer Discusses the Subject from a Practical Standpoint.

WHEN WILL THE MILLENNIUM COME?

Quaint Observations of a Sage on the Joys of Matrimony—Billiards for the Fair Sex—A Pretty Fad.

The arc that creates Wronings and de-thones Bismarcks may be said to exhaust the resources of surprise; and yet who is wise enough to forecast the result of its changes, or calculate with any precision what will come next? writes J. W. Higginson in Harper's Bazar. A few years ago there appeared an able paper in the Atlantic Monthly discussing the woman suffrage movement as something not merely unreasonable but positively mad.

There is another dainty, fat-haired girl, who lives in North Washington square, and she can often be seen playing with her big dolls on one of the benches of that lovely park. She is Miss Eloise Van Wister, and probably the cleverest "billiardist" in the city.

There is only twenty-five years old, and seems solely in order to practice her favorite amusement. Miss Van Wister is an orphan, and her first act upon attaining for-tunate majority was to order a large billiard table of the most expensive pattern.

There is a young man, who is a faithful attendant at the billiard room of the city, and rarely misses a summer concert of any merit, has of late carried a fan that attracts a good deal of attention. says the Illustrated Ameri-can.

THE JEWELER.

From Despatch Sherman to Harper Young People.

The green lawn is the jewellers' shop; There after every rain Is the dew on each trembling drop Into a gem again.

A FRENCHMAN I MET.

By Charles H. Crosey.

In many respects he was the ally of all the heroes of the great world; and at a private hotel in Omaha the other day.

He must have been about sixty-five years old. He was of rather spare build, and his dress seemed to indicate that he was a churchman.
