DECAY OF THE WAYSIDE INN.
 A Relic of the "Good Old Times" Going the Way of all Flesh.

THE INN AND ITS PLACE IN HISTORY.
 Old Red Horse Tavern at South Suburbury and the Immortals it Sheltered--Where the Tales of a Wayside Inn were Written.

The day of the stage coach had ended, says Albert Ellis Hoyt in the Boston Globe. The steam car, with its marvellous accession of speed and power, had told its story to New England, and the old favorite was doomed. It fell, never to rise, and with its fall came a change over New England so great that it is almost impossible for us of a later generation even to imagine what the old New England was.

It has gone so utterly that it is only now and then, when some unexpected reminder of its dead form suddenly flashes up in the mind, a partial portrait of the New England of the not very remote past, that we can get any conception of the completeness of the change. Such a reminder I have lately visited.

In melancholy grandeur, upon a little eminence beside the once busy thoroughfare whence the wave of advancing civilization has swept the travel of a world out of age, stands the old Red Horse tavern at South Suburbury, one of the most romantic of the old hostleries that so eloquently tell the tale of a day that is done. Built over two centuries ago, it was the center of more than one Indian raid, and up in its venerable attic the first settlers hid their corn from the watchful eyes of the redskin plunderers during their early hardships; it knew Massachusetts when she was a slave state, for here is the old little inn swung from the garret wall, the bunk where old Squire Adams' cowe's dwarf slave used to sleep; it was old and hoary when George III. lost his colonies, and the Dutch brick in its chimneys had blackened with the smoke of more than a century when Washington dined and wineed, no doubt, beneath its ancient roof. In its guest chamber, hardly as good as most modern farmhouse attics, slept Lafayette, and one wonders how he ever got a wink of sleep on the old-fashioned rope bedstead that was considered so stately and grand in that quaint old time. It was well on in the last quarter stretch toward its two-century birthday when Longfellow and his little coterie told in its front room the legends that have been woven into the "Tales of a Wayside Inn," and forever identified and given a tinge of poetry and romance to the picturesque old inn. It bore a part in the stirring scenes of the revolution, lodging alike the continental and the Hessian; willingly the one, by compulsion the other--for even hotels have opinions in their time of war.

So soon forgotten are all things temporal. The wayside inn silently yet impressively points the obvious moral. There is no room for the individual, no matter how great his worth, no matter how exalted his rank. All, even the old roof that sheltered Washington and Lafayette and Longfellow, must step out of the way for the incessant march of civilization, or remain in their picturesque localism and provincial loneliness only, like the old inn, as a curious relic of a

ANOTHER DEBATE.
 The Liquor Question to be Again Discussed for Nebraska Voters.

Arrangements have finally been perfected by which a debate will take place at the Grand Island, Neb., on next Thursday afternoon and evening, and Friday afternoon and evening, on the prohibition question. The prohibition side of the issue will be presented on Thursday by ex-Attorney General Bradford of Kansas and Chancellor Creighton of the Wesleyan university of Lincoln, and on Friday afternoon by ex-Governor Larabee of Iowa and Mr. Bradford.

The anti-prohibition side will be presented on both days by Hon. J. L. Webster and E. Rosewater of this city. The Omaha real estate exchange will send out a special train containing a hundred visitors during the debate, and a large attendance is expected from over the state. The debate takes place under the auspices of the managers of the sugar palace.

AMUSEMENTS.
 "Saints and Sinners" was the attraction at the Boyd last evening, the Palmer company rounding out their engagement to the satisfaction of devotees of the theater. The anti-prohibition side will be presented on both days by Hon. J. L. Webster and E. Rosewater of this city. The Omaha real estate exchange will send out a special train containing a hundred visitors during the debate, and a large attendance is expected from over the state. The debate takes place under the auspices of the managers of the sugar palace.

Weather Crop Bulletin.
 WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.--The weather crop bulletin for the week ending September 13 says: Frost occurred in the extreme north-west and in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, Colorado and northern Illinois, with the temperature from 3 to 6 degrees lower than has heretofore been observed during the first ten days in September. The frost in South Dakota was destructive to immature corn and the root crops. But slight damage occurred in Nebraska, Iowa and Kansas. Seedling is progressing under favorable conditions in Illinois. Potatoes are reported as rotting extensively in New England.

Peoria Bicycle Tournament Ended.
 PEORIA, Ill., Sept. 13.--The bicycle tournament ended this evening. The attendance today was very large and great interest was manifested in the events. The New York and Chicago teams were the victors in a majority of the prizes. In the ten mile open race for the championship of America, A. E. Lumsden of Chicago, time, 22:29 1/2.

Poisoned by Rusty Tea Urns.
 LONDON, Sept. 13.--Miss White, a benevolent lady residing at Fulham, Wednesday evening gave a most supper to 100 laborers out of work. Hardy was the meal finished when the entire company was taken ill, many suffering extreme pain. Doctors were called and found that the whole party had been poisoned. Antidotes were administered, but three persons have died and others are still in a desperate condition. The poison was traced to a corroded deposit on the interior of the tea urns, which had not been properly cleaned by the servants.

Floods in the Mohawk Valley.
 ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 13.--For five consecutive days it has been raining in the Mohawk valley. Both Schenectady creek and the Mohawk river have overflowed their banks and the water is still rising. Early this morning the water in the river was rising so fast that it is a consequence of the rain. The weather is very bad for the hop harvest.

CAUCUS OF CONGRESSMEN.
 Republican Representatives Discuss Tariff Bill Procedure.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.--Republican representatives held a caucus tonight to discuss the procedure to be adopted respecting the disposition of the senate amendments to the tariff bill. The main proposition was one coming from the republican members of the ways and means committee, and embodied in a resolution looking to consideration of the amendments in the house instead of in committee of the whole and vote upon non-concurrence in them in gross after reasonable delays. McKim explained that he had communicated with the majority members of the ways and means committee and they had promised to consult their party colleagues and inform the majority Monday what amount of time they desired for debate. There was considerable discussion in the caucus of the proposed programme, and while most of the speakers favored it, others were not wanting who contended that the amendment should be considered in committee of the whole or some other way would afford an opportunity for an expression of opinion upon certain senate amendments. Payson insisted that a general motion to non-concurrence should be adopted, and gave notice that he would stand out for these things, thinking that the interest of the conference committee to act as his agent in the first instance. Speaker Reed pointed out the necessity for the course proposed in the interest of an early adjournment and harmony. Finally, upon a viva voce vote, McKim's plan was adopted and the committee on rules instructed to fix a time to be allowed for debate after the minority is heard from, and bring in a special rule early in the week.

BONDED MERCHANDISE.
 February 1 of Next Year Fixed as the Date of Withdrawal.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 13.--The treasury department caused a careful inquiry to be made today as to the probabilities of congress fixing a later date than November 1 in the pending tariff bill for the withdrawal of bonded merchandise under the existing schedules, the Associated secretary Nettleton has given as to what conclusions were reached by the information renders it as sure as any future legislative event can be foreseen that the date for the withdrawal of goods will be fixed for February 1, 1891. Indeed, owing to a well nigh universal request from the business community a later date may be fixed, and notwithstanding a general feeling of apprehension, grounds or otherwise, connected with an earlier date there appeared to be but little opposition to the change. The senate committee has held no formal conference as to the matter, but I have seen Allison, Aldrich and Hiscock of the senate committee and Chairman McKinley of the house, and am able to state definitely from interviews with them that they favor the proposed extension to February 1. The president today expressed his concurrence in the suggested change.

An Unfinished Memoir.
 (Copyright 1890 by James Gordon Bennett.)
 LONDON, Sept. 13.--[New York Herald Cable Special to The Bee.]--It is understood that Canon Lettice's unfinished memoirs of Dr. Husey will be completed by his friend, Canon Scott Holland, who, like Canon Lettice, at one time enjoyed the friendship of Dr. Husey.

Killed While Crossing Tracks.
