HUMMING BIRDS ATTACK A HAWK.

They Bewilder the Robber and a King Bird Leads a Bill. Hiram C. Judson of Paradise Valley, Pa., has been interested one Sunday this summer, says the New York Sun, in the movements of a pair of humming birds that were sipping sweets from the blossoms of a honeysuckle vine that trailed over the side of the house.

Suddenly a large hen-hawk swooped down, brushed the edge of the rosebush in his right wing, and clamped upon one of the birds with a twinkling. Then the mother hen gave vent to a shrill, startled squall, flew at the hawk and tore out a few feathers.
