UNDER THE DESPOTS REEL. A Terrible Story of Russia's Savage

Intolerance. Isaac Schneider, an intelligent man of twenty years of age of No 1001 Third avenue, called at the New York World ffice the other day and told a story which strikingly illustrates the savage intolerance of the Russian government. He has been in this country about four years and had so far made his way in the face of adverse circumstances.

"My father," said he, "Marcus Schneider, was engaged as a commission merchant in St. Petersburg and was in comfortable circumstances. At one one of the men among his people in the city. He lived in the city twenty-five years, and raised a family of eight children, of whom I am the oldest. I received a let-ter from him about four months ago, in which he told me that a law had gone into effect which forbade a Hebrew to live in any large city under the Russian government, especially St. Petersburg and Moscow. The letter further stated that he had been notified to leave the city within thirty days. He did not know where to go or what to do, and asked me for advice. I wrote a letter to Charles Emory Smith, United States minister to Russia.

door from my father's residence, asking him to assist my family if possible or inform me in what way I could do something for them. I received no reply to that letter. Yesterday I got a letter from my mother telling me of my father's death, and the heavishment of heavy ieath and the banishment of herself and my brothers and sisters from their "When my father received the order of banishment he was in a hopeless condition and not knowing where to go he did not heed it. After the thirty days had passed he was ar-rested and thrown into prison. The horror of his situation threw him into a sickness which caused his death in two days. My mother and her children, the youngest of whom is only six months of age, were then dressed in prison garb, and, in charge of soldiers, were sent to a little town 500 miles away. One-half of that distance they ware compelled to walk. They are there now, without any friends to help them, and in a starving condition."

An interesting historical relic has just changed owners in Scotland. When James V. visited Loudoun castle 400 years ago a handsome black oak chair was specially constructed for him. The "King's chair" was then removed to Sorn castle, and afterwards to Catrine, where, by some mistake it was put up where, by some mistake, it was put up for public sale, and bought by a Mrs. George Mair for a trifling sum. This lady at her death, which occurred recently, bequeathed it to her son.

ONE WAY TO STEAL DIAMONDS

A Trick That Admits of the Thief Safely Submitting to Be Searched. It is natural that articles of great value are objects of temptation, says the Jeweler's Weekly. We are prepared to understand that the common thief is constantly scheming to gain possession of precious stones and jewelry, but it is a matter of surprise to learn, through stories that come from across the ocean, of the tricks indulged in there by the diamond trade—the legitimate, every-day dealers in precious stones. The peculiarity of this condition of things is that the sharp practice of dealers does not involve their reputation or standing, the thing being looked at as a matter of shrewdness and rather admired as a clever piece of business. An anedate clever piece of business. An anecdote is related to illustrate this. A dealer called upon a firm with whom he was in the habit of transacting business and asked to see a lot of diamonds. After examing them for some time he returned the paper, saying that he would call again in reference to buying them. It was at once noticed that a large stone was missing. A hasty search was made, but no trace of the diamond being discovered, the dealer, without more ado, was accused of having taken the brilliant. He indignantly denied the charge and submitted without hesitation to being searched. The stone was not found, and profuse apologies were offered for the false ac-cusation. The following day the dealer appeared again, this time with a paper of diamonds to sell, but also with another object in view, which he took good care not to disclose. A careful observer might have noticed that while the stones were being examined at the light he ran his fingers along the under surface of the portion of the counter where he sat, and picked off something that stuck to the wood. It was nothing more nor less than the diamond which had so mysteriously disappeared the day before. He had fastened it to the counter by means of a piece of wax with which he had provided himself, and on the occasion of his second visit secured his booty.
