Bud Pratt, a resident of Crescent City, has a horse escape from a stable on the city yesterday afternoon. He was in the city driving a spirited team of young horses. On Fifth avenue the animals were frightened by the sudden attack of a dog and ran away. The driver held them until he reached Washington avenue when one of the lines broke, and a few minutes later the buggy was upset. Pratt was caught by the neck and the horse was dragged underneath the vehicle for a block. At the point where the accident occurred there was no paving and Pratt was dragged through the mud. When he got clear of the vehicle he was almost suffocated by the mud and nearly drowned by being dragged through the mud. Only a few bruises and an entirely ruined suit of clothes were the casualties.

An eastern chemist has discovered a process of making soap from corn that is fair to revolutionary soap making. He claims that 400 pounds of soap can be made from one bushel of corn, at an expense that will probably equal the cost of the soap made in the present market prices. There are a number of gentlemen in this city who are investigating the process, and it is proved to do what is claimed for it.

There was a most disgraceful proceeding at the Fifth avenue Methodist church Sunday night, caused by five young ruffians who were well loaded with whisky.

The gang took over the rear part of the church, and after talking so loudly as to disturb the congregation they became so bold that they moved up to the front, and raising a hymn book above his head said to a minister, Rev. Mr. Brewer, "Hold on there, you're wrong!" Several gentlemen started for him, and quickly escorted the fellow to the outside. His four companions followed, and attacked the church folks. The row became so bad that it was broken up, the ladies being panic stricken, and the men being busy in trying to rout the gang of ruffians. Messrs. Howard, Clifton, Barker and Louie of the congregation were somewhat rowdily handled. The ruffians will probably be hunted upon brought to justice.

It is said that one of them was Frank Kane, who was arrested a year ago for stealing a horse. He is reported to have had the whole gang may be sought out and made to suffer severely for the dastardly conduct.

After the gang had created all the trouble they could at the church, they left, and for a time terrorized all that portion of the city. They attacked a young man, the house of a neighbor named Stanton, at 1802 South Seventh street. He was met on the porch by young Stanton and begged protection from them. Before young Stanton could utter a word, Kane came up and jumped over the fence, and, standing, struck him a violent blow that knocked him down. Stanton says he followed him and ran out of the yard, following him several blocks, but finally stopped and returned to the Stanton residence after the Fitzgerald boy. They broke into the house and carried off Mrs. Stanton's jewelry, which they were alone at the time. They searched for a time for the boy, swearing that they would kill him if they did not find him. They did not succeed in finding him, and finally left.

Young Stanton in the meantime had found his father, and the two returned to the house, but the crowd of toughs had vanished and did not molest them any further.

Yesterday morning young Stanton filed an indictment against Mrs. Stanton, charging Kane with assault and battery. The warrant was placed in the hands of Deputy Marshal Fowler, but before it could be served he was notified by Mrs. Stanton that she had concluded to continue it for one week more.

A Soldier Charged With a Vile Crime. Officer Fultz came over from the Island yesterday with his clothes bespattered with mud, accompanied by a couple that attracted a good deal of attention even before they were taken out of the vehicle that serves for a patrol wagon. One was a tall man with black mustache and rather fine-looking physique, dressed in the uniform of a private in the regular army. The other was a ruddy-faced little German girl, whose brown curls reached scarcely to her waist as they marched from the street into the city jail. The soldier was manacled and appeared very uneasy. The little girl was sobbing violently, and her face bore a haunted, terrified expression.

The man gave the name of John Nickolain, and said he was a soldier located at Fort Omaha. The little girl was questioned by the reporter in his presence, and told the story of a shameful assault that had been committed upon her by the fellow, and told him in broken English between her sobs with such evident sincerity that every word carried conviction to all who heard her. She and her name was Mary's father, and that she had been working at a boarding house kept by Mrs. Donahue, corner of Ninth and Pacific streets, Omaha. Her home was in the town of Neola, and she had come to Omaha to come to Omaha. The only relative or acquaintance she had in Omaha was a cousin who was a soldier located at Fort Omaha. She had started out to find him. Among the first soldiers she accosted at the barracks was Nickolain. In answer to her inquiries concerning her cousin Nickolain told her he was well acquainted with him, and that he had just left the barracks, but if she wanted to find him he would take her to him. The readily consented to the apparent kindness, and the scoundrel took her to Cut-Off island, and got her in the rear of a saloon kept by a one-legged man named Smith. Here he shamefully abused her. Smith claims, without his knowledge. During the afternoon Nickolain induced a negro to come to the saloon, and the girl could be used as evidence to protect himself in case any trouble arose over the matter.

The screams of the child when the negro was admitted by a back door attracted the attention, it is claimed, of Smith, and he went out and acquainted Officer Fultz with the facts. When Fultz got to the place the soldier and the negro had flown. The girl was taken in charge and cared for during the night. Early Hopes for the Democrats. DENVER, Colo., Nov. 17.—It is stated tonight the trouble in the Knights of Labor assembly which he existed since Saturday morning, was caused by the discovery of an attempt to use the order for political purposes, and asserted some of the executive officers during the last campaign issued circulars requesting the Knights to vote for Pattison, democratic candidate for governor in Pennsylvania, and that in other places the same measures were used. The debates were very heated at times, but tonight it is learned satisfactory explanations were made and the matter is settled.

Why Named Guthrie. Judge Guthrie, of the district court of Kansas, is the man after whom Guthrie, in the Oklahoma territory, was named, according to the Kansas City Times. He went to the front during the famous race at the Oklahoma opening with a party of Topeka citizens who expected to get a slice of the new territory and a share in the new towns. When the bell sounded the judge and his friends made the wild race across the country toward the site of the present city of Oklahoma. They settled on the coveted land, but from the bushes came the regulars—men who had been waiting for years for that day. They tossed the handsbells of the Topeka citizens aside, and their canons away and threatened to make targets of the sliks of the "Kansas dudes," as the Topeka gentlemen were called by the men from the bush. The Topeka delegation retired, and Judge Guthrie lost his silk tie. Though he lost his tie, he was not hurt, and the judge has been more than compensated by the naming of the town in his honor.

Storm in the South. NEW ORLEANS, La., Nov. 17.—Dispatches from northern Louisiana and several points in Mississippi, report the severest storm experienced last night known for years. Great quantities of rain fell, and the fields and some warehouses were flooded.

wrangling wires stretching around on the ground. The man who could not get in contact with the cable, the escaping current would heat them to an intensely white heat, and the contractions of the metal would cause them to snap and scatter the contents, emitting brilliant showers of sparks. All the lights on the circuit were instantly extinguished, and the increased resistance at the electric works caused the fuses on the switch board, and for ten minutes the entire city was wrapped in darkness with the exception of the portions illuminated by the gas lamps.

The break was repaired after a brief delay. There were no accidents.

AMBROSIAL ROMAN PUNCH. The Original Vatican Recipe for the Beverage of the Pope. The history of punch a la romaine is curious, says the American Analyst. It has been the summer refreshment of successive popes for over eighty years, and their chefs were threatened with all kinds of horrors and punishments if they ever divulged the secrets of its preparations. When Napoleon invaded Italy in 1796 this terrible interdict was broken through. A son of Pius VI's chief confessor, by name Molas, as soon as he found the French were conquering, ran away from his father and united his fortunes with them. This young man became the favorite servant of the Empress Josephine, and after her death became cook to the Russian Prince Lieven, who made the great care that none of the prince was appointed ambassador to the court of St. James. The Russian first made his pal beverage in London by introducing it at the prince's table. TO ESCAPE AN ODOR. Baltimore reports the strangest railway accident of the past week, says the St. Louis Republic. A man about forty years of age was recently taken to the Maryland university hospital, where on examination it was discovered that he had sprained his right ankle and broken two ribs. He said that there was some offensive odor in the car, and that he leaped from the train to avoid it. Rank tobacco is unpleasant to many, but it is better to endure it for a time than to risk life by a foolhardy leap. Even had the car been permeated with assafetida it would have been better to endure a strain on the olfactory than to incur such peril as this traveler, by his own account, was willing to incur. The statement is probably correct. A man who had been injured by causes beyond his control, giving him a fair claim for damages, would not have been likely to have made a statement absolving the company and throwing all blame on himself. What is really surprising is that a man could have lived for forty years and learned so little. At times a convict with a long term of imprisonment before him risks a flying leap, choosing the possibility of death rather than the certainty of captivity. No one need be surprised at such cases. Even were the train an express, a desperate criminal might prefer instant death to wearisome years. Suicides will occur from time to time, despite all precautions that can be taken. But this man is not described as a suicide. He was not a fugitive from justice. He did not wish to kill himself. Rather than submit to temporary inconvenience he jeopardized his life. To his credit, he is stated, he possesses the virtue of candor in an unusual degree. Many would have had no doubts as to their own guilt of the folly to which he confesses.

Railroads in Utah. A communication from Salt Lake City published in the Denver Republican presents a view of the railway situation in Utah which indicates that in the course of a few years that territory will possess a railway system extending into nearly every quarter.

The construction of such a system of roads will be the very best thing which could occur for Utah. Colorado's wonderful growth since 1850 is due as much to the construction of railroads into remote parts of the state as to any other thing. The construction of these roads has promoted the development of the resources of the state and has opened up new localities for the settlement of new inhabitants.

Utah is a territory of great natural resources. It wealth is not confined alone to the district of which Salt Lake City is the center. The southern part of the territory is known to be rich. There are several very prosperous Mormon settlements in the south. In different localities there are good mining districts, and there is not the least question that the opening of the territory by railroads would lead to the development of mines and bring Utah prominently forward as a mineral-producing section.

The trunk-line roads are not the only ones which promote the development of new country. The Union Pacific has been for more than twenty years been operated through southern Wyoming, but it has not had a great deal to do with the development of that state. What a new country needs is a great system of branch roads feeding the trunk lines with the products of sections which would otherwise be entirely cut off and which would also enable those sections to develop their resources and market their products. This is the kind of a system which it seems Utah will likely soon secure.
