ANOTHER TRIBUTE.

It Is Paid by the United States Court to the Late Judge Savage. At the opening of the United States court yesterday morning Judge Dundy announced that the report of the committee appointed to pre pare resolutions on the death of Judge Savage would be heard.

The committee of the court, consisting of Messrs, C. S. Montgomery, W. R. Keliey, H. D. Estabrook, E. M. Bartlett, C. A. Bald-win and A. C. Troup, presented the following resolutions:

In due course of nature and full of years and the glory of a well-spentiife, James W. Savage, for more than twenty years an honored leader at the bar of this court, on November 22, 1830, departed this life.

James W. Savage was born February 2, 1826, in Bedford, N. H. His early years were lived at the home of his father, Rev. Thomas Savage, a Presbyterian minister, during which period, upon the example and teaching of his father and mother, was laid the foundation of that after-life of culture and good deeds. He commenced his preparatory edudeeds. He commenced his preparatory edu-cation in 1841, at the Phillips Andover acad-emy, and in August, 1843, he entered Harvard college, where he graduated in 1847. He was admitted to the bar in New York city, N. Y., on February 12, 1830, and performed his first labor in the arduous duties of his profession as managing clerk in the office of his cousin, Hon. Lewis B. Woodruff, a responsible posi-tion where he exhibited the rare abilities evidenced by his later work, both at the bar and upon the beach.

Inspired by loyalty to his country, which to the day of his death was a notable element in his character, on July 1, 1801, he entered the regular army service of the United States as captain, and was assigned as aide-de-camp upon the staff of General Fremont. In October, 1801, he was promoted to the position of major, and in March, 1802, again to the office of licutement coionel. In December, 1803, he resigned his commission in the regular army to receive the of colonel of the Twelfth New York volunteer cavairy. He served throughout the late war, and until August 15, 1865, when he was mustered out of the service, which he had aided by his in-telligence, bravery and enthusiastic loyalty. the came to the city of Omaha in April, 1867, and entered upon his professional work, which he continued until the time of his death with distinguished success. In 1870 he was the candidate of his party for the office of representative in congress, but was unsuccessful, in attempting to oversome an insuccessful in attempting to overcome an adverse political majority. In 1873 he was elected by the Nebraska legislature as a regent of the state university, which office he held until 1875, when he was elected judge of the Third judicial district of Nebraska. In 1879 he was re-elected to the same office. Owing to serious impairment of his health he resigned before his term expired. His vigorous administration of the office, his quick comprehension and natural sense of justice, and his conscientious impartially enabled him to take the highest judicial rank. His popularity was such that the length of his service was limited only by his own deter-mination; he might have served as long as he lived. In 1883 he resumed the practice of law, attracting to himself at once a large clientage, which he retained to the last, During this later period herefused the office of chancellor of the state university, which was offered and pressed upon him with great urgency. In 1885 he was a candidate for the office of judge of the supreme court, and came very near an election in the face of an adverse political majority of over 25,000. He was one of the trustees of the Omaha public library, and from July 1885, he held the posi-tion of government director of the Union Pacific railway company, baving been re-ap-cific railway company, baving been re-appointed from year to year.

In April 1875 he was married to Mrs. Lucy T. Morris, daughter of Alanson Tucker, of Derby, N. H. The domestic life of the two thus united was most happy, and noted for a generous and delightful hospitality. During his busy life Judge Savage found time for extended scholarly attainments. He was an enthusiastic Shakesperian student and a learned historian, having prepared and read before the Nebraska state historical society before the Nebraska state historical society several valuable papers, and being a member of the historical societies of a number of other states.

This recital mone is evidence of a life of energetic activity and of duty at all times bravely met and well done. Our brother, James W. Savage, was a citizen above reproach, a brave soldier without flaw, a ripe scholar, a lawyer for many long years preeminent, a judge great in ability, pure in character, and just and mereiful in judgment; all men respected and admired him and his friends loved him; his life was ideal, his death a triumph. Words cannot tell the regret and sorrow of those who mourn his departure, but they grieve not as those without parture, but they grieve not as those without hope, for they have a certain joy that he has been merely translated from the limited to the limitless, and that his great soul released from earthly bondage has already gone to realize the infinite possibilities that he be-lieved in and that his acts in life gave prom-ise of. Let his memory be cherished and his example followed.

example followed.

Following the reading of the report Mr. C.

S. Montgomery addressed the court, paying a tribute to the memory of the dead jurist, whom he characterized as a man who never sought preferment in public life, but always waited for the office to seek him. His highest ambition had always been in the line of personal culture. He was always against het in sonal culture. He was always genial, both in public and in private life, and in him the court public and in private life, and in him the court had lost a learned counsel and the har had lost the association of a brother.

Mr. E. M. Bartlett addressed the court briefly, giving a few personal reminiscences of the deceased. He stated that he had formed the opinion from observation, that the great strength of the late jurist lay in the fact that he was simple and honest which was the reason he was so generally beloved. One of the principal characteristics of the One of the principal characteristics of the deceased was his custom of treating everyone alike and this had made him many friends.

At the close of Mr. Bartlett's remarks the court announced that it heartily endorsed everything which had been said and the report of the committee was ordered spread upon the records.

Judge Dundy announced that court would be adjourned until afternoon, as he was not

DR. DINSMOOK DEAD.

The Well-Known Omaha Physician Passes Away.

Dr. C. M. Diasmoor died yesterday morning at 6:15 o'clock after an illness of several weeks at his residence, 2308 Douglas street. He had been confined to his room for several weeks, and from the outset his skillful meaical friends forctold that he could not long survive. Apparently he was in excellent health, but his appearance concealed the etfeet which his malady had upon him. The doctor in fact had been ailing for six months before he was compelled to take to his bed, and finally gave up only when, after two days of almost continuous service, in stormy weather, in his buggy, he was prostrated with a cold which intensified his retained consciousness until about two days ago, when the pain he has been suffering was destroyed by insensibility. The last years of Dr. Dinsmoor's life, which had been otherwise full of sunshine and beneficence, were clouded by the death of his wife and the machinations of a villain who roobed him of several thousand dollars. The money was finally recovered, but at great expense and after a great deal of anxiety. During this bereavement and trouble, the dector had the symmetry of huntreds of ad-

During this bereavement and trouble, the doctor had the sympathy of hundreds of admiring friends.

Charles Mackenzie Dinsmoor was born at Hartland, Vt., August 1, 1828. He was the eldest of four children. Until he was eighteen years of age, he lived with his grandfather, Deacon Charles Mackenzie, doing farm work and attending the district school. He was fitted for college at Kimball, Union He was fitted for college at Kimbali, Union academy, at Meriden, N. H., and received his degree of master of arts from Waterville college, Maine. His native tastes led him to adopt the medical profession. He pursued his studies with the late Drs. Ira Warren of Boston and Horace Green of New York; also at the Vermont medical college and at Harvard, where he took a partial course, com-pleting it at the Hahnemann medical college and hospital of Chicago. From the Missouri homosopathic medical college of St. Louis he received, in 1881, the honorary degree of Many professical honors were bestowed upon Dr. Dinsmoor while alive and during his residence in this city. He was a member of the Nebrasda state homoeopathic society, of which, at one time, he was the president; of the Western academy of homoeopathy, of which at one time he was vice-president; also a member of the associated alumni of Hahnemann medical college; and a member of the American institute of homoeopathy.

Although devoted to his profession, Dr. Dinsmoor was by no means neglectful of the many duties which fell to his lot as a citizen. many duties which fell to his lot as a citizen, and in many ways his public spirit manifested itself. To his credit may it be said its tendency was always toward objects promotive of fraternity and charity. This proceeded from a general kindliness of disposition and a very sympathetic nature.

Of the order of the Knights of Pythias he was one of the most active and influential members, in Nebraska lodge No. 1, of which,
