dale on Sunday evening for interment. There is a general complaint of laxity observed in the enforcement of the quarantine regulations in diphtheria cases. About the only thing that is done when a case is re-ported is to placard the house with a big yellow poster and place no restrictions at all upon the people who live in it and are brought into direct contact with the disease. If it does not spread and become an epidemic it is certainly not the fault of the health authorities, but is due only to the fact that physiclans are mistaken and the disease is not contagious.

Some time ago John Green complained of Fred Nusbaum for selling liquor to young Green. On a trial in the justice court Nus-baum was fined $50 and took an appeal. The appeal was being heard in the district court yesterday. The evidence was rather amusing, as a showing of how lit-tle men know of what is being sold over a ar. It seemed that those who spent much time in the place did not know whether it was a saloon or not, in fact, seemed to hardly know what a saloon was,

Officer Beswick endeavored to arrest J Martin, an Omaha man, last evening while he was reeling along the street in a breesy state of intoxication. He resisted arrest and Officer Wageck was called to assist. It required the united strength of both officers to take the man, and then they only succeeded after they had made free use of their clubs. The arrest was made in front of Mandel & Kicin's store, and a let of goods displayed on the sidewalk were demolished in the scuffle. Martin will appear before Judge McGee this morning with a very sore head.

The ladies' fair of the Trinity Methodist church will close this evening. The attendance last evening was very large, and the managers were more than satisfied with the patronage. The ladies have arranged a beautiful display of holiday goods, including all kinds of useful and fancy articles, and they are selling them at prices that beat the regular holiday bargains in the stores. The fair entertainment last night was very pleasing. Today a royal old fashioned dinner will be given from 11:80 until 2 p. m., and the ladies will be pleased to have business men of the city come in and enjoy their hospitality. This evening the concluding entertainment will be a "gypsy carnival," and it will be a novel and enjoyable affair. The proceeds of the fair will be used to defray the debt on the new church. The fair is being held in the south room of the Masonic temple building on the ground floor.

A Catnip Cat.

An old gray cat strayed into A. D. Foster' new drug store yesterday and gave a remark able exhibition of the aptness of the name given by our grandmothers to a genus of plants described by naturalists as N. cataria, vulgarilly called catnip. The drug store is being moved from the old location on Broadway, and among other stuff taken in was a large original package of catnip compressed into small cakes. The package had been placed on the top of a tall desk in the back part of the store, fully eight feet from the floor. The old tabby had evidently observed the package as it was being carried along on the street, and she con-cluded to have a holiday treat of her favorite herb. She walked into the store and made a careful search until she discovered the location of the drug, and then quickly scaled the height and attacked the package with claws sharpened by the keenest ex-pectancy. The paper covering was quickly toren away, and with a 5 cent package in her mouth she sprang down and carried it with as much satisfaction as if it had been the fattest moise in Council Bluffs, began to devour it with a hearty appetite. When she had eaten as much as she wanted she thanked the clerks, who had witnessed the feat, with a polite "meow" and walked out of the store apparently well satisfied.

A Little Indian War in Which the Redskins Capture the Cemetery.

DIVORCE DOES NOT END IT ALL

Mr. and Mrs. Whittlesey Have a Legal Battle Over Their Child-Boy Burglars-A Continental Tramp.

There is a little Indian war speck on the horizon visible in Council Bluffs. Before it ends Chief Carey's elegantly uniformed and finely disciplined police may have a chance to glut their he in gory war, with the indians furnishing a large part of the war material and the principal amount of the gore. The mayor's office and the police head-quarters, the citadels of the city, have not been threatened, nor is the city itself besieged, but the redskins have assaulted and captured Fairview cemetery, the peaceful and beautiful city of the dead that crowns the sunny hillsides in the north part of town. They applied the torch in the night time, after silently investing the silent city, and then skipped. This is how it happened. On Thursday night about 10 o'clock Officer Claar, whose regular beat takes him to the top of the hill on Oakland avenue, saw a light in the northern end of the cemetery. He made an investigation and found the light to proceed from a campfire, which was surrounded by a number of Indian men and one old squaw. They were squatting araund it, enveloped in old blankets. The officer went up to them, showed his star, his club and his gun and then mo-tioned to get out of there. They were as immovable as the tombstones among which they quatted and the officer began to talk to them in good honest Anglo-Saxon. If they understood him they refused to acknowledge it any further than by giving him sundry angry scowls and black looks. He tapped his star, his club and his gun again ominously and pointed to the north star and ordered them by energetic pantomime to go to it, or to Omaha, or anywhere else, so they got out of there. Their answers were still blacker scowls and more angry looks. Their teeth gleamed in the fitful light like the tusks of packals. Officer Claar isn't a man to be easily frightened, but was something so uncanny in the surroundings that his blood grew a little colder. The savage faces recalled the fancies of his youth and the pictures of ghouls and goblins that live in graveyards and eat up little boys. He concluded to wait until he made his 11 o'clock report at the central station and then he would tell Sergeant Safely about it and ask for instructions. The report was made, would tell Sergeant Safely about it and but no instructions were given, the officer only being told to keep his eye on the redskins during the remainder of the night and if they attempted to sack and burn the city while the people slept to sound the toesin while the people stept to sound the totals from the nearest patrol box.

At 12 o'clock a reporter for a city paper, who sometimes sees ghosts, heard of the presence of the redskins, and invoking the protection of his guardian angel and his big ulster overcoat, crept to the top of the hill and looked. Nor did he look in vain. The scene had changed. The little spark of fire around which the shivering redskins were gathered when the officer was there, had grown into a billow of flame that threatened to consume the marble monuments. He flew down the hill and brought the report to the central station that the redskins were dancing a genuine ghost pance, and he was not sure that half of the corpses in the cemetery sure that half of the corpses in the cemetery had not joined them.

A platom of police were sent to investigate, and they found the reporter's story had considerable foundation. The redskins had set fire to the dry grass and skipped. The south wind carried the fire over the northern half of the cemetery, and inflicted a good deal of damage on the trees and shrubbery.

It was avident that the act, was maligious It was evident that the act was malicions and was done immediately after Officer Claur had ordered them out. The police were hunt-ing for the savages yesterday, but they could

The police have long been cognizant of the existence of a gang of jovenile burglars, composed of some of the toughs of the city, but they have been unable to get any more definite information than that which could be obtained when they occasionally arrested a youngster detected in committing petty larceny. Tramping Across the Continent. Zoe Gayton, who is making the walk across the continent from San Francisco to New York, is at the Revere house for a brief rest and change of apparel. She is a woman of about thirty-five years of age, and this is her first pedestrianic attempt of any account, she having for years been on the stage. Mazeppa being her favorite character. The long tramp on which she is now engaged is the result of a wager between San Francisco parties, the the trip, the condition of winning being that she shall walk across the continent in less than 220 consecutive days, thus being under the necessity of averaging better than fifteen miles a day. She started from San Francisco August 27, and expects to reach New York in March. The season of the year with its expected severity of weather and snow storms was counted upon as a disadvantage sufficient to defeat her attempt, and especially to cause a delay in crossing the Rockies. Al-though she met some snow yet the weather has been comparatively favorable, and when she reached here she was 240 miles ahead of the needed amount to comply with the average required. She follows the line of the railway, the tracks being better average walking than the wagon roads. From here she starts east along the track of the Chicago & Rock Island railway. In her walk she is accompanied by W. J. Marshall and J. L. Pierce, who represent the two different parties in the wager, and who see to it that she does not fail to observe the conditions of the bet. It would be rather difficult for her to ride, if she was so disposed for in following along the rail. so disposed, for in following along the rail way tracks the trainmen along each line be come familiar with the contest, and are on the watch along the line from day to day. Each day telegrams are sent reporting the record as it is made. A little spaniel, a great pet of the walker, is accompanying her, and is mak-ing a record for himself as the dog that crossed the continent.

Divorce Don't End All.

R 'N. Whittlesey dragged his domestic troubles into court again yesterday. His former wife, from whom he was divorced about three months ago, has since then been living in Chicago. The order of court in connection with the decree of divorce gave her the custody of the child, a sweet little girl. but the same order made it her duty to allow him to visit the child at seasonable times, and to keep him informed as to the whereabouts and welfare of the child. He claims that she has not done this, and that during the three months or more past he has received from her but one letter concerning the child, and at one other time the child's picture, enclosed without a word of comment.

Yesterday she arrived in the city in company with Mr. and Mrs. Griffith, the latter being her sister. She had received a telegram in Chicago stating that their mother, living in Tacona, Wash., was very ill and not expected to live. She prepared as soon as possibie to leave for her mother's bedside, and in planning the trip left Chicago on the train leaving there about 6 o'clock in the evening, instead of waiting until 11 o'clock, when she could have got a through train. She thus planned in order to stop a few hours in Council Bluffs and give Whittlesey a chance to see the little girl before taking her west. the fittle girl before taking her west.

She went to his office on arriving here and took the child with her. She told him of her mission west, and that she was anxious west, and that she was anxiou to catch the train at 2:30 in the afternoon and proceed on her journey. He wanted his mother to see the child, and so an arrangement was made for them to meet again at Eiseman's store at 1 o'clock. When she was on her way to meet this engagement what was her surprise to have an officer step up ther, and arrest her for contempt of court. I appears that Whittlesey had been consulting with his attorneys and concluded that since she had got within the jurisdiction of the court, and was so soon to be beyond its reach, the time was opportune to have her brought before the bar and given a forcible reminde:

that it was her duty to write to him more frequently concerning the child.

She and the child were accordingly brought before Judge Carson. The judge was busy and just about to send a jury out in another case. He stopped proceedings, however, in order to listen to the matter, and the jury in the other case was kept waiting. Mr. Pusey, who is Mrs. Whittlesey's attorney, was busy in the superior court, where a jury was being empanelled. He had to excuse himself to attend to this matter, and so the machinery o another court was stopped. Mr. West, Whit tlescy's attorney, was trying a case in Justic Barnett's court, and so that court had to Barnett's court, and so that court had to stop. The delay in securing the attendance of Mr. West was such that train time had passed before the case could be even opened, so that Mrs. Whittlesey will have to wait until this afternoon before resuming her journey. The taking of the evidence occupied the entire afternoon. During its progress Mr. Pussey, in commenting upon some matter, so severely in commenting upon some matter, so severely scored Whittlesey that the latter excitedly jumped up from his chair and almost shouted, "That's a lie." A bailiff sprang forward to seize him, thinking he was about to strike the attorney, but Whittlesey quickly obeyed the attorney's sharp order to "sit down," and trial proceeded. Whittlesey's attorney apolo-gized to the court for the action of his client and the matter was dropped.

Judge Carson decided to dismiss the contempt proceedings and set Mrs. Whittlesey free. The decree in the divorce case did not state how often she was to write him, and as she swore positively that she had written him six or seven times in three months, he saw no proof of her having failed to comply with the decree.
