HIS COMPANION'S NARROW ESCAPE.

Deadwood Laborers Stranded in Omaha-The Investigation of the Flumbing Inspector's Affairs -Other Local News.

Another victim of an accident in the railroad yards lies at Heafey & Heafey's undertaking rooms, and a young companion lies at his home with his scalp frightfully torn and lers severely bruised, yet happy withal, because by the merest chance, he escaped a horrible death under the merciless car wheels The accident occurred yesterday morn-ing on the B. & M. switch tracks under the west end of the Union Pacific bridge, when switch engine No. 173 struck George Remkos and a boy named W. M. Fantnant, and the former was instantly killed. It same that Remkos and the boy were

It seems that Remkos and the boy were walking down the main track carrying large pieces of sheet iron on their heads, and the engine with a car of cinders was going in the same direction on what is known as track No. 3, but which runs parallel with the main track and opens upon it just below the bridge. As the engine came up behind them they were seen on the other track, and just then the firman, on whose side they were, step-ped down from his scat to shovel some coal into the firebox. A few seconds later, the engineer saw a piece of sheet iron emerge from the other side of the track about six feet shead of the foot-board on the front end of the engine. It was apparently be-ing carried by someone, and al-though the engineer immediately reversed his machine, the man was struck before the engineer could see him. The man fell squarely across the track, with his neck across the rails. He was pushed a few feet and the engine and car then rolled over him, the last wheels of the rear truck of the car being on bim when brought to a stop. The car was pulled ahead a few feet to clear the body and the coroner was notified.

was notified. The switching crew was made up of J. H. Staulters, foreman; B. S. Gleason, engineer; Ed. Shriner, fireman, and Thomas Stolicker and John Sammon, brakemen, all of whom were subponned to attend the inquest.

From the stories of those present at the time of the accident, together with such information as could be gathered from the boy in his naturally confused state it is supposed that the two thought that the train was coming up on the same track on which they were walking, and to avoid it they stepped over for the other track just as it was upon them. They did not look behind them owing to the loads they were carrying on their heads, as well as sacks of old brasses and old metal of various kinds which they had.

Remkos was a little ahead and stepped on to the track, while the boy was apparently just about to cross the rail when the foot-board struck him and knocked him out of harm's way. He did not appear to be ser-iously injured, and was removed to his home near the corner of Pierce street just east of the tracks, where the company's physician was called to attend him.

Remkos was completely decapitated, and the headless trunk was rolled several feet be-yond where the head was left. News of the awful affair reached the ears of the poor woman before the mangled remains of her husband had been removed, and she hurried to the spot, leading three of her little ones, the oldest of whom was not six years of age.
