The Government Has a Say.

Under the caption "Government Authorities Have Something to Say," the Wall Street Journal of the 20th has the following : The Omaha bridge controversy was at the time it broke out carried to the railroad commissioners and by them to the secretary of the interior, on the ground that the government interests in the Union Pacific were in jeopardy by the contracts, which was the jeopardy by the contracts, which was the reason given for breaking them. The secre-tary of the interior at once consulted with the attorney general and Commissioner Tay-lay of the Pacific railroads in regard to the matter. It has just transpired that an opin-ion has been handed down as a result of this consultation, in which it is stated that as a business proposition; there is no fault to be business proposition, there is no fault to be found with the St. Paul and Rock Island contracts with the Union Pacific, and that there is no cause for the government to in tervene; that in respect to the St. Paul contract it was eminently proper, and the only question with respect to the Rock Island con-tract is whether a company should admit a competing company to the use of its termin-als. It is suggested that the United States government has no right to prevent competi-tion and therefore they do not see why the government should intervene in that case, especially as the government's interests are not threatened in any manner.

A New Union Pacific Division.

Beginning yesterday a new subdivision will be established on the mountain division of the Union Pacific for passenger traffic only. Trains will be run between Pocatello and Salt Lake instead of between the former point and Ogden as heretofore. The freight traffic will be con-ducted as before lucted as before.

That Bridge Decision.

"It is very amusing to read the statements of Mr. Thurston in reference to the running of our trains over the Union Pacific bridge," remarked Mr. F. A. Nash of the Milwaukee road. "They say no

JOHNNY GRINNELL'S CRIME. He Killed the Man who Had Ruined

His Happy Home. "John Grinnell, Decorah, Ia.," was the name written in unasspming, though strikingly characteristic chirography upon the register of one of the prominent hotels Sunday, and this name to the initiated, recalls instantly the particulars of a series of chapters in a tragic romance as intensely interest ing as those of any novelist that ever wrote lurid lines for the perusal of sensation lovers the world over. Mr. Grinnell is tall and slender, with a dark, intelligent face and a mouth as sensi tive as a woman's. He is partially crippled in one foot and his figure has been a familiar and much respected object upon the streets of numerous county scat towns in northern Iowa for many years, for he is an expert court stenographer and has long gone about with Judge Granger in that capacity.

Several years ago Mr. Grinnell met and married a beautiful girl, for whom his affection had always been of the most romantic sort. She is also a stenographer and often accompanied her husband upon his journeys and aided him in his work. Several years of happy married life passed; a little years of happy married file passed, a fitte son came to biess them, and all seemed going well, when suddenly one day a great doubt of his wife's fidelity shook the faithful hus-band's heart. The suspected man was one named Cornell-note the similarity in names -an engineer in the employ of the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, and his at-tentions to Mis. Grinnell became so open as to become a matter of public sendal though o become a matter of public scandal, though he husband, as is usually the case, had been the last to be suspicious of that which threatened death to all his happiness. After a time he became coavinced that something was really wrong, and he boldly accused his wife of infidelity. At this she broke down completely and acknowledged everything. She said that she wished to do right, but declared that for some reason this man over her; she could not explain, nor give any reason for her feelings, but confessed to the unhappy husband that she loved the stranger and that while in his presence her will power and that while in its presence her win power seemed completely paralyzed. She wept and begged her husband to take her away. So "Johnny" Grinnell, as he is always af-fectionately called by the people, took his wife to Dubuque and built a beautiful home and placed his treasure therein. For a time peace and happiness seemed to smile upon them once more but soon he discovered to his dismay that the tempter had followed them, and with renewed importunities he besought the wife to leave her husband and to flee

Then Johnny Grinnell became desperate. He saw in very truth, his home, his honor, all the sweetest things life holds for most men, threatened with destruction. And what nan can look upon these things without igony?

But even then his great desire was to do nothing rash or ill-advised, so he sought counsel of friends. At their advice he met his enemy in the presence of mutual acquaintances and asked of him a cessation of his obnoxious attentions to his wife. But the man, with the smile of a fiend upon his face, defied the wronged husband and dared face, defied the wronged husband and dared him to do his worst. Well, one day, after sleepless nights and days of agony Johnny Grinnell came to himself and found his hands dripping with the blood of a fellow creature. When he speaks of his sorrow now he reverts to this terrible period with trem-bling horror. He declars that he was downbling horror. He declares that he was down-right insane, utterly irresponsible at this time, but he further asserts that his enemy's death became a physical necessity to him,and that had he not taken hisrival's life he would certainly have become permanently a raving maniae. He simply could not keep his senses and know that the wrecker of all his happiness-the mocker of his sorrow-lived upon the earth; so he killed him and rid the world of one whose class is all too numerous. And or one whose class is all too humerous. And surely the man richly deserved his fate. Mr. Grinnell was arrested, but, strange to say, was promptly released on ball in a mercly nominal sum. This, as much as any other circumstance, shows how well known, were the people were with him. Indeed, the whole populace of northern Iowa were aroused in his favor, and he was constantly commended for his action.

Increasing the Library Fund. The ordinance providing for the tax levy for 1801 will come up for passage tonight and will go back to the council in the same shape as it went to the committee with the exception of the amendment that the school fund levy will be decreased from  $3^{1}_{9}$ to 3 mills, with the additional mill added to the public library fund. It has been sun-posed that this was an increase of the levy for library purposes from 1 to  $1\frac{1}{4}$  mills, but such is not the case. Some days ago the council conceived the idea that the library could be run on a one-half mill instead of a mill levy, as in former years, and so recom-mended. Since that time the members have investigated and come to the conclusion that the library cannot be maintained by a one-half mill levy, and the amendment to the or-dinance simply transfers the additional levy of one-half mill back to the fund from which it was taken. the exception of the amendment that the it was taken.

Delinquent Personal Taxes.

The county personal tax became delinquent last Saturday, but very few of the thousands of people, firms, etc., who are interested paid any attention to the fact.

"A remarkably small amount of this tax has been paid in as yet," said County Treasurer Snyder, "and I am very sorry to have to state the fact, principally on account of what it bespeaks for the supply of money in the it bespeaks for the supply of money in the city. Last year about or possibly more than one-half of the county personal tax was paid before the day on which it became delinquent. The county treasurers of the past learned to depend upon the banks and railroads, the large manufac-turing, wholesale and retail concerns coming to time promptly, if the smaller ones didn't.
