

THE CITY.

James Brennan, the cabman who stole 50 cents from Jim Stephenson, was fined $5 and costs.

C. A. Johnson had a warrant issued yesterday for the arrest of Rosa Page, charging her with stealing $5.

Frank Dickinson, who was arrested for stealing flour, was given thirty days in the county jail yesterday by Judge Helwig.

Charles H. Conroy, armed with the proposed amendments to the school law pertaining to the independent district of Omaha, went to Lincoln yesterday.

The members of the Buchanan division of the Women's Christian Temperance union will hold a business meeting at the Y. M. C. A. hall at 2:30 p. m. today.

The McLeod-Holmes hardware company filed articles of incorporation yesterday. Capital, $75,000; J. N. Cornish, N. E. McLeod, O. C. Holmes and H. O. Davies incorporators.

Charles Frus, the B. & M. switchman who was run over and lost a leg in the yards near the union depot last Thursday, is lying at St. Joseph's hospital in a very critical condition.

Ex-State Senator James P. Lindsay, who has recently been appointed receiver of the land office at McCook, is in the city for the purpose of having his official bond approved.

Licenses Inspector Riley has asked the city attorney to prepare a new ordinance respecting the collection of license money from vendors, one that will stand the test of the courts as to legality and effectiveness.

J. Radzwich of South Omaha is in jail for trying to pass a counterfeit silver dollar at Hellman's store, Thirteenth and Farnam, yesterday. The coin is a very poor counterfeit, and it is alleged that Radzwich previously attempted to pass it at the office of a local insurance company.

Ed Strong, a white man with a colored wife, with whom he has had a great deal of trouble, was attacked by her yesterday morning, and she tried to kill him with a razor. Both were arrested, and after reaching the jail the colored woman gave her husband a hearty thumping, before the officers could interfere.

James Walsh, who is wanted in Sada, Mo., for the seduction of Carrie Smith, is in jail here, arrested at Ashland, where he was working as a bridge carpenter for the B. & M. The requisition on which he is being taken was the first one honored in this city. Walsh admits that he is guilty of the crime charged.

The Best for Children.

While Minnesota is one of the most healthy states in the Union, it is one of the worst for colds, owing to the severe winters. Many of the druggists there, make it a rule to give their customers just what they call for; but when they come back and say it does no good, they most invariably recommend Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, as will be seen by the following from Messrs. Wells & Schroeder, of Southern, Minn.: "We have recommended Chamberlain's Cough Remedy after other leading cough preparations had failed to do any good, and always with the best results. We can always rely upon this remedy, as it is sure to effect a cure. It has no equal for children; especially in cases of croup or whooping cough."

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

This evening Shipp & Ashton's New York circus commences a fortnight's engagement at the Coliseum, and the personnel of the company is sufficient proof of the merits of the performance.

Miss Julia Lowanda, who comes from a celebrated family of bareback riders, who was with Foreman during the seasons of 1887-88, and Miss Josie Ashton, who was with Foreman during the seasons of 1888-89, and with Sells during 1889 are the leading equestrians. Here Drayton, the modern horseman, who has just returned from a successful London season, is a member of the company. Mr. Shipp, the world's champion bounding jumper will appear together with twenty other riders at the Coliseum.

The Coliseum has been converted into a winter circus building, with a padded ring and all the necessary paraphernalia of a tent show.

This feature of winter circuses is new to the west, but ought to prove as successful as in eastern cities and across the ocean.

The company is excellent and a first class performance may be expected this evening.

Miss Cora Tanner will appear at the Boyd this evening, presenting for the first time to Omaha people Miss Martha Morton's romantic drama, "The Philis of Time," of September 2, 1890, says: "That familiar but still popular farce comedy, 'The Two Johns,' was given by the best company ever seen in this city, and no audience ever more thoroughly enjoyed assisting in the settlement of the question which was Peter and which Philip that that which gathered at the People's last night."

The next attraction at the Grand opera house will be J. C. Stewart's comedy company in the three-act musical farce comedy "The Two Johns." The Philis of Time, of September 2, 1890, says: "That familiar but still popular farce comedy, 'The Two Johns,' was given by the best company ever seen in this city, and no audience ever more thoroughly enjoyed assisting in the settlement of the question which was Peter and which Philip that that which gathered at the People's last night."

William Gillette's great comedy, "The Private Secretary," will be the attraction at the Boyd on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. It will be played by a very competent company.

DENNIS' DOUBLE JOINTS.

He Has Two Sets of Inspectors and Still Isn't Happy.

In the dim religious light of Major Dennis' office yesterday morning could be discerned two groups of men, separated by an invisible boundary line and several yards of frigid space. They had apparently never been introduced, and they seemed to be sedulously endeavoring to get to know one another, in which attempt they were fairly successful. There was, however, a method in this lack of cordiality. The men on one side were the assistant inspectors who were recently brought to make room for "democrats" only, while the group at the other end of the little, tucked-up office was entirely made up of the afore-said democrats. The idea suggested itself that the major had anticipated the prophecy of the scriptures and seated "the sheep on his right hand and the goats on the left," but this time the major was not guilty.

A head was pushed inside the door, but quickly withdrawn, and several forms went stealthily scurrying down the corridor to a dark corner where they halted in secret conference. A bluish blaze of the gas revealed the features of President Lowry and Councilmen Osthoff, Tuttle and Morarty. Just then Elsas came in and, lurching toward the conferees after remarking that he had been throwing the reporters off the track, "Finally the body advanced to the plumbing inspector's office and made a formal demand upon his vacant chair to produce the head of that department, when presto, the door opened and the mayor himself came in.

"I understand your name is Dennis," vouchsafed Osthoff, grabbing the major's hand, while the latter emitted a brief giggle and ostentatiously greeted the other members of the delegation.

"Anon, business is business, and I want to speak to you, major," said Tuttle, taking a businesslike grip on the inspector's arm, and marching him down the corridor to the recently vacated corner. After about five minutes of industrious coaching the major was released, and he reentered the office, beat it savagely, tossed the papers on his desk from side to side, and then, with a look of defiance, turned toward the two ex-inspectors, Henry Dunn and John Bolan, and in a voice intended to be choking with rage, demanded: "What do you two men want?"

"We're here on business," replied Dunn.

"On business, eh? Well, I'll just tell you that this is my private office inside the railing, and I want you to get out of it. Do you understand that?"

"We belong to the office," confidently replied Dunn.

"No, you don't," shouted the major, and then the pair industriously chewed the rag until the councilman's forms again loomed up in the horizon.

"Major, you are aware of the council's action last evening and we want to know what you propose to do with those two parties," said Mr. Tuttle, pointing toward Bolan and Dunn.

"I have just told them to get out of my office."

"You don't," shouted the major, and then the pair industriously chewed the rag until the councilman's forms again loomed up in the horizon.

private office, and that is all there is to it," again warbled the major.

"Well," said Morarty, "we want to give you notice that we will defeat any appropriation bill that may come up for paying those men."

Nothing more was said and the interested parties looked at each other until the situation became very embarrassing, when the councilman stalked out, the major began writing as if his life depended on it, and the ex-inspectors lifted their feet on a desk and smoked industriously, and Kazanushich, Godfrey and Murphy, the democratic appointees dropped out to look after pipes, joints and trunks.

The major was asked what he intended to do regarding the action of the council.

"Everything is all right, and the business of the office will go along just the same as it did before," was the reply.

"What will you do with the men who have been ordered reinstated?"

"The vacancies are all filled," was the evasive reply.

"Didn't the majority of the council order their reinstatement?"

"I have authority to say that the new men will continue in their present places."

"What authority?"

"Authority to know that there are no vacancies," snapped the major, shutting his mouth like a clam saving good night.

Across the hall in the office of the chairman of the board of public works, Mr. Chaffee was relating the incidents of last evening's session for the benefit of Mr. Birckhauser and City Engineer Tillson.

"The major was right," said he, "but there would have been a fight in about two seconds, if Groves hadn't discovered his mistake."

"John was all right. He meant to do all right, but he honestly made a mistake in recording Olsen's vote. It was a mean advantage for Lowry to take to refuse a poll of the house. He didn't act decent in the matter."

"By the way, there was something kinder funny about the report of that committee that investigated the plumbing inspector's case. When the report was submitted the evidence was not accurate, although it was all taken by a stenographer, and the notes extended at the expense of the city."

"The city clerk asked for the notes, but Morarty informed him that the notes were his personal property. Another rather peculiar feature of the case was that each member of the committee assigned one of the new assistant plumbing inspectors, and the one with the most 'influence' appointed two of them. Donnelly says we must take our medicine, and we will if they can give it to us. They must be careful to see who mixes the last dose."

"The situation is rather funny now, as each side has a majority of ten members. There will certainly be a full attendance at meetings hereafter, and the councilmen will turn their backs on the mayor's office and go back into the plumbing inspector's office unless they want to, but they will draw pay all right whether they work or not, and the councilmen will not draw pay if they are with us, and we can pass an appropriation without them. They might as well take a little medicine while we are taking ours."

While Chaffee was making these remarks a delegation appeared at the door, being evidently unaware that the councilman from the treat, falling over one another in their haste.

"Good morning, Mr. President," called Chaffee in bland and childlike tones, but Lowry closed his starboard eye and let away his flock without noticing the salutation.

The action of the council at its last session was also discussed in the mayor's office.

"I don't see what the council is trying to do," said the executive. "They have no business whatever to interfere in the matter of appointments in any of the departments."

The plumbing inspector is appointed by the mayor and approved by the council, and their jurisdiction ends. The inspector is held responsible for his office and should have competent men under him, and not political hangers and bunglers. What difference does it make what a man's politics is so long as he does his work well. The council might just as well attempt to tell Flannery that he should not employ shavers on the streets unless their politics were all right."

If the plumbing inspector is not all right, the council must impeach him, and if the mayor will not discharge him, carry the case into court. Ten of the democratic councilmen came in here and wanted no more men appointed except democrats, and I decided that if that was the kind of feel they wanted I would give it to them. If the assistant inspectors recently discharged were let out at the command of the council because they were democrats, it was wrong, no matter what starting right. As a Rule,

It is best not to attempt to remedy constipation by the use of saline or drastic purgatives. When a cathartic medicine is needed, the most prompt and beneficial is Ayer's Pills. The effect is to restore the regular action of the bowels, without weakening them, being sugar-coated, these pills retain their medicinal virtues for a long time, and are easy to take.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"In 1858, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fevers, and colds. They served me better than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since."—H. W. Hersh, Judsonia, Ark.
