

ROBERT RAY HAMILTON DEAD.

So Declares Dr. James O. Green, Who Ordered His Burial.

HIS OPINION OF THE STORIES AFOAT.

Story of the Dead Lawyer's Life in the Mountains—His Dog Stayed with the Body—Reasons for Burial.

[Copyright 1891 by James Gordon Bennett.]

Feb. 11.—[New York Herald Cable.—Special to The Bee.]—"That is undoubtedly the watch I took from the pocket of a dead man in the Rocky mountains last summer," said Dr. James O. Green today, when the timepiece of Robert Ray Hamilton was laid before him by the dead lawyer's brother, who has just arrived from America with a commission containing a request to take evidence proving the death.

"I wish the Herald would say there is not the slightest truth in the wild, fantastic stories afloat. Hamilton is dead and he undoubtedly was drowned while trying to ford a stream on horseback after dark. The idea that a corpse was dressed up in Hamilton's clothes in order that he might quietly disappear in some distant land where the story of his mysterious wife and bogus big game could follow him is absurd. To carry out such a theory one would have to assume a murderer, for in no other way could a corpse be prepared. Jackson's Hole valley, where the body was found, is surrounded by high mountains, and Point Snake river, where the tragedy occurred, is over one hundred and fifty miles from Kentucky, the nearest railway station. The suggestion of suicide is equally foolish.

"Mr. Hamilton was riding with his dog from his ranch at one end of Jackson's lake to his ranch at the other end, fifteen miles. His workmen were building a sort of log hotel, had complained that they needed a meat. Mr. Hamilton was, therefore, anxious to kill some game and was led out of his path by an antelope which he killed. It was probably after dark, because the man generally wind their watches at dusk in the wilderness, and when I examined Mr. Hamilton's watch, I found it had stopped a few minutes past 9 and had only run down a couple of snake turns of the winder. How could he cross the river to reach the ranch and then, after having laid the body in a stream, just where the body was discovered, but the water beyond was deep and swift and full of weeds. Hamilton, weighted with a full cartridge belt, had huro spurs, which, no doubt, caught in the weeds. The saddle was pulled under the horse's belly and so the dog was able to get at the antelope's haunches which were dead and keep himself alive, during the eleven days, before the searchers came upon the place. Until this moment, I have kept the secret of the real reason for which the face of the corpse could not be recognized. I did not want to shock the family. The fact is, it was not only swollen and discolored in a most awful way, but the fishes or turtles had mangled it as the body floated face downward, of course. All the blood had at the bottom and Hamilton's father could not have told anything about the corpse except by the clothing or private marks. I wish the Herald would say that I strongly object to the statement that I have, at any time, identified the corpse.

"I did not know Hamilton in life, and even if I had, it would not have bettered the case. The reason why Hamilton was not missed sooner is very simple. His partner, Sargent, was in the ranch at one end of the lake and Mrs. Sargent was in the ranch at the other end. Mrs. Sargent supposed he was with her husband and Sargent thought he was with the wife. When the husband and wife met, they knew something had happened and they called for a general search. They supposed he had been killed by horse thieves, and it was through one of these searching parties that the hunting camp learned the story of the disappearance. Mrs. Sargent told them Mr. Hamilton intended to go to New York in October to have his marriage with Eva Mann nullified and return to the Rockies in the spring and stay there for the rest of his life. I did not meet Sargent, but was told by the men he had killed his horse, that the contrary jacket, the coat, dark trousers, leggings, gloves and boots of the dead man as the clothes of Hamilton. Besides that I found a leather book, of trout files in the pocket with the name Hamilton marked in ink. It will be impossible to reach Sargent for some time, as there must be, at least, twenty days of snow on the trail to Jackson's Hole. It is one of the wildest, most inaccessible valleys in the Rockies. The trail I followed was the one General Sheridan cut for President Arthur's Yellowstone park trip. It will be impossible legally to identify Hamilton's corpse until Mr. and Mrs. Sargent are reached. They are the only persons alive who can do it, but no one need have any doubt that Hamilton died by accident. The last I saw of the poor fellow was the boat containing the body, covered with green boughs, gradually disappearing in the distance. When I got to the head of the lake, I stopped a carpenter who was building a house for Hamilton and told him he must build another kind of a house, a coffin.

"All the surrounding circumstances show that nothing was prearranged about the tragedy. Hamilton left no ranch to go to the other; took with him a horse and dog found near the body. The clothes on the boy were his. The antelope haunches account for the late hour of the accident and the place where it occurred. He floated away; his trunk sank in the stream. Searchers told me they could see his hat floating along the bottom but it would be rusted and useless. Hamilton's blankets were left in the ranch by him, showing that he did not intend to stop out over night. Besides, he was full of plans and actually died while they were in progress. I have no patience with those who say the failure to bring the body to New York is suspicious. The body was buried on my advice. I am a physician. I examined it to see if there were any evidences of crime and my duty to society was ended. Then I told the people there, as the corpse had been in the water eleven days and was bloated to such an extent that by the time it was carried a hundred and fifty miles to a railway it would be in a condition that would compel the railroad to refuse it transportation. The result was on of the question, and so I said flatly that the body must be buried at Jackson's Hole.

"At Mrs. Sargent's request, one of our party photographed the hillside where Hamilton once said he would love to be buried. You may be sure, when Sargent is reached, he will knock all those dime novel theories to pieces and establish the death of Hamilton perfectly. He is a man of education and intelligence."

This was substantially the story Dr. Green also repeated to Consul Post under oath. He positively denied any identification.

Parnell to O'Brien.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—[Special Telegram to The Bee.]—"The last information Gill conveyed to me on our negotiations being of that character, I concluded that nothing is left to be done on my part but to bring our endeavors to a close. I regret that it has not been rendered possible for me to consider national interests so carefully guarded that I could feel there would be no danger to the life of the President in such a responsibility which has been placed upon me and which I have accepted from the hands of our nation and race. I regret that no course is left but a withdrawal from the negotiations. The seal of confidence which covers what has passed between us prevents inviting public judgment. But if it is ever moved in an incident it will be held that I did everything in my power consistent with national interests to promote peace and reunion. Whatever side true Irishmen take, they owe you thanks for your efforts."

O'BRIEN'S STATEMENT.

Reunion the Only Thing That Can Save the Irish Cause.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—[Special Telegram to The Bee.]—"The experience of the past five weeks, gathered from personal interviews, letters and newspapers, completely confirms my conviction that the only thing that can save the Irish cause is the reunion of the recent Boulogne conference he says: "I cannot too strongly express with what feelings we found a settlement so vital and widespread at the last moment by mere hints of my views and phrases—contests which, to my mind, offered a thoroughly inadequate excuse for committing the country to a struggle involving countless sacrifices and appalling loss. In conclusion O'Brien says: "One of the saddest things in this terrible business is that circumstances rendered it impossible to give organized effect to the overwhelming public opinion for a reconciliation while the field is held by hostile passions who have done their worst by expatriating language and insulting suspicion, scarcely veiled threats and rumors and intrigues to make the work of peacemaking impossible. The irreconcilables of all sections have carried the day. Dillon and myself cannot stand between them and their detestable work. We can do nothing more till we have recovered freedom of action by getting through with the sentence standing against us. Mr. O'Brien expresses the hope that the inevitable conflict forced upon the country may be conducted without personal bitterness, so when the unhappy passions of the hour have subsided themselves may again co-operate in the nation's cause. Dillon in a short statement admits that he has been largely influenced to mediate by the vindictive action of Parnell's most prominent opponents. The personal element in the struggle had in many minds hopelessly obscured the public good. He has driven thousands in Ireland and America into Parnell's camp who otherwise would have opposed his continued leadership. "I wish to say that I do not view as to the method of compromise, but from the beginning of the negotiations powerful influences were working on both sides against peace and the peace was so sorely to sorrowfully announce failure."

A Heavy Responsibility.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—[Special Telegram to The Bee.]—"The Pall Mall Gazette in its issue of today says a heavy responsibility rests upon Messrs. O'Brien and Dillon, who according to the Gazette, have shown a strange vacillation in treating Mr. Parnell as co-equal with the Irish representatives and negotiating in the old lines of a committee room as if no deposition or Killybegs election had occurred. The Gazette adds that when Mr. Parnell's defeat promised to become final it was incredible weakness to consent to a one-sided treaty, leaving Mr. Parnell free to prosecute his ends. Mr. O'Brien suppressed the only organ of Dublin opinion loyal to the Irish people. Mr. Parnell has naughtily captured the negotiations his opponents humbly initiated. The not only does not credit Messrs. O'Brien and Dillon with repairing the mischief done and revert to the anti-Parnell policy which they assumed in their December manifesto."

What London Papers Say.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—[Special Telegram to The Bee.]—"The Standard says it is understood that Parnell took exception to the inadequate assurances given in regard to the right of imperial veto and Irish representation at Westminster. The Irish campaign will be based upon the principle of resistance to clerical dictation. The news also that the negotiations failed because the liberal leaders declined to give any assurance regarding the home rule bill, Mr. O'Brien expressed the only organ of Dublin opinion loyal to the Irish people. Mr. Parnell has naughtily captured the negotiations his opponents humbly initiated. The not only does not credit Messrs. O'Brien and Dillon with repairing the mischief done and revert to the anti-Parnell policy which they assumed in their December manifesto."

McCarthyites on Parnell.

LONDON, Feb. 11.—[Special Telegram to The Bee.]—"The Chronicle, referring to the card scandal says: The prince of Wales addressed Sir Gordon Cumming in very strong language, which was never presented and which according to Cumming, was the cause of his signing in a moment of panic and agitation a document in which he swore the card table. After this midnight scene, the prince of Wales locked the doors and pledged the five articles present to secrecy. When it leaked out, all were vastly surprised and declared that they had rigidly kept faith with the prince. As for the prince of Wales, he cannot complain that he has received no consideration from the prince's parties as still conducted on the old lines. Parnell is well as well to receive a little healthy light."

MECHANIC'S LIENS. The Subject of Animated Discussion by the Builders' Exchange.

An animated meeting was held yesterday afternoon at the rooms of the builders' and traders' exchange in response to a call issued to all interested in the proposed change in the mechanic's lien law.

There was a large attendance of members of the exchange, and a number of real estate men and others, not members, were also present.

The committee appointed at a previous meeting to consider and report upon any changes in the present law, presented the bill prepared by the real estate exchange, which changes the law in such a way as to give laborers only a lien upon property, doing away with that feature of the present law which permits a contractor to attach an alien upon the property second only to a prior mortgage. The bill was submitted by the committee without recommendation. The report of the committee was read and the matter brought before the exchange for discussion.

A Nine-Year-Old Suicide.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—[Special Telegram to THE BEE.]—"The day's record of suicides seldom include the name of a child of such tender years as those of Maggie Gluder, nine years old, who threw herself from the fifth story of a tenement house on First avenue last night. Maggie was a bad girl and, to keep her in the house last evening, her step-mother took off her shoes and sent her to bed, threatening to tell her father of her bad behavior. A little after 10 o'clock the inmates of the adjoining house heard moans and cries on the roof of the house, and going up, found the child lying unconscious. She remained in that position for some time, and from her bedroom window. She is not expected to recover."

As a Remedy.

It is best not to attempt to remedy constipation by the use of saline or drastic purgatives. When a cathartic medicine is needed, the most perfect is Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The effect is to restore the regular action of the bowels, without weakening the system. Being sugar-coated, these Pills retain their medicinal virtues for a long time, and are easy to take.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hegan, Leittsville, Pa.

In 1856, by the advice of a friend, I began the use of Ayer's Pills as a remedy for biliousness, constipation, high fever, and each time they secured more relief than anything I had previously tried, and I have used them in attacks of that sort ever since."—H. W. Hersh, Junction, Ark.

had had in the supreme court, during which recital he was subjected to a running fire of cross-questions by Louis Bradford, who sought to show that Mr. Hogg was in the habit of selling lots on contracts with small cash payments with the understanding that the purchaser was to improve the land by erecting a house.

A member of the exchange raised a point of order and Mr. Hogg took his seat. Mr. Bradford of the firm of Welshans & Gibson argued that the material man should be protected. If the present laws were repealed material men would have no protection from the deadbeats, and there would be no inducement for them to come to Omaha.

Louis Bradford was the respondent, and he opposed the stand taken by Mr. Hogg. He said the real estate men were in the habit of selling on contracts, taking $3 or $10 as the first payment and compelling the purchaser to erect a house on the lot in order to make the security better.

Under the decision of the supreme court, returned by Mr. Hogg, the seller who compels the purchaser to build becomes a responsible party and guarantor for the material furnished.

The real estate man wanted protection they should sell lots legitimately and take mortgages, which should be put on record. They would then be ahead of all the lien holders, who would have to take their chances.

John Wakefield endorsed what Mr. Bradford had said and followed by Charles Specht, who read the riot act to those real estate men who buy acre property at $300 and sell it at $10,000 to poor men, from whom they receive small payments and require the purchaser to improve the property at once. If these men wanted protection they should not sell the real estate until the purchaser had taken the full cost of the land in cash.

Mr. Hogg took the floor again to protect himself against the action which had been made on him. He repeated his position that the decision of the supreme court made it possible for an irresponsible party to place a lien upon property without the owner's knowledge or consent, and challenged any material man to contradict him.

Then followed a prolonged discussion in the matter of the proposed law, which was over again and again without developing any new features, all the material men being opposed to any change in the law and Mr. Hogg being alone in his position in favor of its repeal.

During the course of this discussion Charles Specht, in language so forcible than polite, denounced the contents of a circular which had been sent to a land shark scheme designed to rob the poor man and sell property at a figure far in excess of its value.

After those present had fully discussed the subject, all who were not members of the exchange were invited to retire and a vote was taken upon the proposed law, which was carried by the committee, which resulted in the report not being adopted.

THE ANTI-THEFT SOCIETY.

Its Precautions Laughed to Scorn by the Light-Fingered Gentry.

The members of the Douglas County Anti-Theft Society are in sackcloth and ashes. From Omaha to Chicago, some weeks ago this society, which has its headquarters in McArdle precinct, published the following notice: A reward of $50 would be paid for the arrest of any member of the society.

Since that time the thieves have been making the lives of the officers very burdensome. First the treasurer, Joseph Rhorer, was visited by the light-fingered gentry, and when they left, all of his turkeys, chickens, some hams, and a number of other articles were stolen.

The present secretary, J. C. McArdle, was then visited, and two weeks ago he was aroused from his slumbers, and gun in hand he started on his hunt to find that some person had walked away with 150 geese, turkeys and chickens. But the raid that lays all others in the shade was made Tuesday night.

The captain of the association is James Walsh. Tuesday he spent the day in Omaha and returned on Wednesday morning. It was found that during the preceding night some person had visited his premises, broken open the door of his warehouse, and carried off several bushels of oats, besides completely demolishing his stock of poultry by taking away all of the tows.

The members of the society held a meeting yesterday, renewed their vows and swore vengeance on thieves. Hereafter members of the association will nightly patrol the precinct, and if a man who cannot give an account of himself is found, his chances of life will be exceedingly slim.
