Second Regiment Soldiers Practicing in Marksmanship. ARRANGEMENT OF THE RANGE CAMP. Thorough Facilities for Developing the Private's Aim—The Three Classes—How They Work—Camp Notes.

The annual rifle practice of the Second Infantry opened yesterday morning at the Beckwith range.

The first battalion of the regiment, consisting of company A, Captain Keller, company B, Captain Dempsey, company C, Captain Ames, and company D, Captain Sarson, marched from Fort Omaha to the range last Tuesday under command of Major Worth, and pitched its camp on the ground to the east and south of the range.

Besides the officers mentioned there are in camp Captain W. C. Spencer, surgeon, Lieutenant Wilkins, quartermaster and range officer, Lieutenant Bookmiller, adjutant, and Lieutenant Powell.

The tents of each company are arranged in two rows, facing each other, two men being assigned to each tent. The camp is pitched in a deep ravine along the east side of the range, the officers' tents being at the south end.

Standing out prominently among the others is a large double tent in which files a flag bearing a red cross on a white ground, the symbol of the hospital corps. This is the hospital tent, which is provided for all emergencies likely to arise.

One part is set aside for a dispensary and contains all the necessary instruments and supplies for treating promptly and while the other part contains two tables prepared for possible patients. It is very neat and airy and the hospital department is in charge of Hospital Steward F. W. Greenblatt and Private Joseph McGuire of the hospital corps, under the direct supervision of Dr. Spencer.

The three days previous to yesterday were passed by officers and men in preparing the camp for their first day's work, and everything has been arranged in first class style and the camp made as comfortable as possible.

The regular order of practice firing commenced yesterday. The men are divided into three classes, namely: First season men, those who have never fired a rifle; second season men, those who have had experience during one season; and subsequent season men, or those who have had two seasons or more of experience.

The recruits are allowed fifteen preliminary shots at each range in order that they may become acquainted with the rifle and they are then allowed forty shots at each range for the purpose of making a record.

The second season men are allowed ten preliminary shots at each range and forty shots for record. The men in the highest grade are allowed ten preliminary shots and twenty shots for record.
