Those who have heard the colonel sing will readily nuch excitement in legal circles as the order of Judge Carpenter by which General Butier was ejected from the room in which the session of the superior recall his rich burro-tone voice. Some idea of his buoyancy of soul may be court was being held. This isn't the first time by any means that the venerformed from the following extract from a poem he wrote while here, and which, after a most desperate struggle, I succeeded in wresting from him when he attempted to read it to me: "My giad soul seems to fizz and squirt, Like ginger pop that's burst its fetters! My buzzum surges, till my shirt Is torn into 10,000 tatters My frontispiece, which ever glows With quite surprising phosphorescence! As this glad soul flood outward flows, Is tickled with the efforvescence! "Oh, would I were a little bird! To dwell amid these trees forever! My joyful twitters would be heard, Ten miles beyond yon rolling river! Or were I but yon calf I see, Sporting about in bovine madness! I'd flap my tail in ghoulish glee, And ever beller bleats of gladness !" My jolly comrade's gladness of soul however, was but of short duration. We cooked by turns. One morning Visch, would sleep while I got up and prepared breakfast; the next I would get up and get breakfast and allow him to sleep. One morning after I had started a fire and was disinfecting a war relic in the shape of a piece of bacon, proparatory to dark yet! I looked at him in astonishment, and in a moment divined the truth. In his rambles he had come in contact with some poison ivy, and his face was so swollen that both his eyes were completely hid from view.

He was stone blind.

It may have been very wicked for me to make sport of the poor boy's affliction, but I couldn't help it. I crowded the fun of a lifetime into the two days of his blindness. I will say nothing of placing a frying pan full of hot flour gravy where he would step into it in his stocking feet, or of sitting the dish water in the water bucket's accustomed place with a drinking cup beside it; but I must tell one story, at the risk of violent assassination when next I meet him. He was sitting in front of the cabin reflecting upon his past sins and won-dering if he would ever reform and lead a better life, when I noticed our pack animal, a small Mexican burro (donkey) standing in front of him in a dreamy at titude, evidently about half asleen.

able fighter and lawyer has had dispute with a judge before whom he has been trying a case, but, of course, it is the first time that a judge retaliated in the way Judge Carpenter used his authority. The general him-self likes to tell of his experience with Chief Justice Chief Latine Chief Latine Chief Justice Shaw, before whom he tried the greatest case of his life. The general was a young man then, and he describes the justice as an able, but shrowish gentleman. Many times during the progress of the case the general and the judge "talked back" at each other, and in coming in from Lowell on the train one morning the young lawyer said to a car full of acquaintances that he was taking a ferocious looking young bull dog that accompanied him up to the court room, that Judge Shaw might teach him how to growl. Very differ-ent however, was the revenge that the James D. Houston, who has been de-scribed as the "first lieutenant" of the ynching mob at New Orleans, is said to wear a coat of mail underneath his everyday clothes. For ten years he was the political "boss" of Louisiana and some of the most lucrative offices held in the state. He came into power in 1876 under the first democratic state ad-ministration. During his period of of fice he was engaged in some half-dozon shooting affrays and escaped from all of them without a scratch. Those who witnessed several solemnly affirm that the bullets of Houston's adversary bounded back from him, and in no cut-ting scrape could he be injured. Ho was regarded with superstition by the ignorant in New Orleans. Ho met with political defeat some years ago and has eldom been before the public since.
