The Errors of Man.

Clothing manufacturers are mortals and make errors. They will buy thousands upon thousands of yards of cloth in all sorts of patterns, and, too oftentimes, that which looks the handsomest in the piece looks the poorest made up, and makes the poorest "seller" in the lot.

They lay in the wholesaler's loft year after year, the sewing loses its strength and the goods often become moth eaten. By the retailers of this country that class of suits are pat-named "bull pups," "ranks," "chestnuts," etc., but they are finally sold to some far western fellow for little or nothing.

Show us a clothing house anywhere in the United States of thirty to forty years standing, and we will show you a house that never resorted to that class of trickery. For the custom gained is only temporary at best.
