MONEY FOR THE LADIES. Coffee-colored laces are bon-ton.

Gauze of various colors are worn again this season.

A cream-white gauze is very much worn on fashionable waists.

A neat stamp box is made in the form of a United States mail bag.

Cowlings and roses seem to be the favorite blouse in millinery.

A ring in oxidized silver represents a common nut built into a circle.

Some of the most charming table decorations are those done with foliage only.

Buttons edged with gilt or silver braid are clever, with buttons of these metals.

In low cut shoes the lace overlay is seen in combination of patent calf, suede and oia.

Thumb rings are the latest fancy of the fall. They look lovely to wear on a journey.

The medical collar is still used, but is much cut away in order not to confine the throat too much.

A silver ring that is rather novel in design is in the form of a strap apparently buckled around the finger.

A new feature of the season's silk is the short effect, which runs through all the different varieties of weaves.

It is quite the style to announce an infant's arrival by sending out tiny cards, engraved with the little one's name.

In the evening dress there is either no sleeve or one so short as to be described more properly as ruffie than sleeve.

A brooch is made in the form of a large many in enamel, with a jet set with small diamonds, and is used as a brooch.

Sarah is generously broad with pompadour designs, and also is decorated with skin motifs under the name of "Sarah do Barry."

White, straw with tiny sprays of pink roses and forget-me-nots, inclosed in a lace-like brocade, is the most effective combination for waistcoats.

A few skirts with hip draperies are seen, but they are so in the minority as to be unimportant.

You must sit in the middle of your saddle, with the body in an upright, but unforced position, bending neither forward, backward, nor to either side.

A late novelty in shoes for dress purposes is a lace balmoreal made of patent calf or seal leather, with a snake head tip. This is made over an English last.

Spotted parasols imitate a woven fabric, and have a curious, stumpy spot. Poncee parasols and umbrellas are also shown, nor has the Japanese shape disappeared.

Gold and silver mounted card and letter cases are now made in sets of three sizes. They are made in a variety of fancy leather and usually come in a pink or a blue color.

The trimming of hats is getting more than ever. It seems to be decided that jet, with an admixture of delicate lines of gold, shall be a summer garniture throughout the season.

Many of the princess dresses have all the seams corded the full length of the skirt, with cords covered with the same material; in addition, the seams are covered with narrow passementerie.

Perfumed gloves are a novelty on sale at some of the shops. They are usually the simple mousseline cut, and are also worn, but with orris root to their fragrance is practically imperishable.

Sprays of flowers, either carried in the hand or in the pocket, or attached to the side of the dress and hanging downward seem to be absolutely indispensable as a part of the toilet.

The gayest of all effects is seen in the brocade material of which some parasols and coaching umbrellas are made, and which introduce so many different colors in the pattern that they can be carried with any dress.

The turned down collar, called "the 1890," is the latest collar to be worn with the tailor dress. Reversed collar, also worn, but they are rather troublesome and conspicuous, and the usual plain cuff with links is preferred.

The parasols are striped silk or satin display black and white, black and gray, lilac and white, blue and white, and red and white, or cream or coral with green and blue, and with black and red, and blue with a darker blue.

The bridal veil originated in the custom of performing the nuptial ceremony under a square piece of cloth held over the bride and groom to conceal the blushes of the latter. At the marriage of a widow it was dispensed with.

New bodices for home gowns have a drapey across the bust made, by cutting the fronts three inches longer and gathering this in at the bust and again at the center. Round fronts are worn with pointed backs and vice versa.

The sleeves are still worn large, and are to have more than ever, long tight cuffs, and these latter are to be richly embroidered and jeweled. It is said that gloves with gauntlets are coming in, owing to the tightness of these new cuffs.

To take the place of the comfortable and becoming furs are all sorts of combinations of feathers and gauze. Long fleches of gauze edged with soft fur, and lined with a part of the delicate fabric, are to be made to be worn with delicate dresses.

One of the latest things in the way of feminine headgear is the champagne "Rochel." It is of black open straw, with knot of blue mousseline de soie in front. The crown is encircled with the same material and ornamented with black and white.

A new design in gauze is the "forked lightning," which is now being made up prettily over black and pink. A dress of this had a front worked on in gauze, which carried large bows and small flowers with pendant fringes, the effect is most graceful.

Fronts are still lapped to the left, many forming a point at the bust, and another one at the waist line. Double-breasted, bodices having a point and tapered darts are becoming the large figure, the back may be in a point or narrow coat shape.

In fashionable Parisian hairdressing of the moment the distinctive feature is the soft hair, which is parted in the middle and brought low down on the forehead and again at the left temple. The rest of the bang is drawn loosely back to meet the small coils into which the long hair is twisted.

The new sailor hats are absurd; there is nothing else to say of them. The crown is so low that it is a mockery; it is compensated for in the brim, which is enlarged and stiffened. They are to be worn very much tilted forward, and the preference is for mixed straw of various colors.

A hat without a canopy, says a writer in the New York Sun, is today like a pretty girl without an admirer. The style most fancied is the brass one with pink canopy and side curtains, and the one with a white canopy and side curtains. The white iron bedsteads usually have either white or yellow canopy and drapings. As the bed stands, the canopy and drapings are so arranged that they can be pulled up to form a canopy, forming a point half way down the skirt.

The newly imported ornaments of French jet for dresses, collars and waists are of cooling elegance, and show deep pendant beads with large spearhead drops attached to the belt, which are made of the hanging pieces to a line five inches below the waist, garnishing the front of the skirt with superb effect.

Round necks are preferred to the V or square shaped. The simplest chais or gingham frocks may be worn with gumps, or if high-necked they may be shirred, laid in tiny plaits or shirred, and the collar is made of the front to imitate a round or square yoke. Sleeves are the high-topped coat-shape or of the short or shirt style, and the cuff is stiff.

A dress in gray bangles is made with a bias skirt, each seam being corded and finished at the bottom with a puffing of the same material, and a cord of the same material, the fullest being gathered to a point at the belt under a motif of jet. A shower of fine jet falls from the side of the corsage, forming a point half way down the skirt.

The largest importation of cotton goods this season seems to be gingham, exquisitely fine Scotch, and very new and very new devices of pattern. The most notable features are extremely large plaids of zephyr coloring, closely imitating the tartan and the clan plaids, and the combining of groups of variegated fine stripes with wide white satin stripes.

A new skirt called the "umbrella skirt" is made without a seam, except in the middle of the back, the material being used horizontally, and has four large and elongated plaits in the back, and the skirt is usually wider at the back than the front, in order not to detract from the height of the wearer.

With the turn-down collar the tailor made girl and her tailor have agreed that jaunty small bows shall be worn as cravats. Black satin bows very carefully made with the ends stitched across are correct, and narrow linen washable ties in all colors—pink, blue, buff and mauve, with embroidered white dots are charming for spring mornings.

For the shirts and chemisettes to be worn with these cravats, the suits are made of soft, with stiff collars, the plastron of silk or unstarched batiste.

The "tailor made girl" is rejoicing this year in the smartest of new garments—a frock coat, the counterpart of the serious masculine habit, and of the perfect cut, carefully fitted and finished in every detail, especially in the facing of the lapels with black silk, which, when worn, especially insists, and is not too conspicuous, as is the style of the long coats so much worn.

The latest neckwear for this style of costume is the old-fashioned "scarf" or "tie," worn as a cravat. It is a voluminous piece of bias silk, black being the most correct. Folded, it is worn as a cravat, and is modeled after the collars of the same epoch.
