GRAND ARMY DEPARTMENT.

THE WILDERNESS CAMPAIGN.

Stories of the Fight for the Salient Told by Those Who Were In It. The first volume of war records on the Wilderness campaign is about ready to be issued, says the Washington correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. It contains the reports from the lieutenant general down to the colonel upon the fighting, which began early in May, 1864, and lasted well into the summer. At Spottsylvania, on May 12, increst centered, as all of the Army of Potomac well remember, in the capture and possession of what is variously known to history as "the Sallent," "the Angle" and "the Slaughter Pen." Hancock, in his report, tells the story of the assault at dawn in these words:

"The direction in which our troops should advance was ascertained by a line determine; by a compass on the map from the Brown house toward a large white house known to be inside the enemy's works, near the point we wished to strike. The formation was as follows: Barlow's division in two lines of masses was placed on the cleared ground which extended up to the enemy's line; Brooke's and Miles' brigades in the front line, Brown's and Smyth's in the second line, each regiment forming double column on the center. Birney's division formed in two deployed lines on Barlow's right. In front of him was a marsh and a dense wood of low pines. Mott's division formed in rear of Birney. Gibbon was in reserve. These preparations were scarcely completed at day-light. A heavy fog decided me to delay the order for the assault to commence for a short time, until we should have sufficient light. I therefore waited until 4:35 a.m., when the order was given to advance. Birney had some difficulty in making his way through the marsh and woods in his front, but he pushed forward, overcoming all obstacles, keeping well up with Barlow's division, which moved at quick time for several hundred yards, his heavy column marching over the enemy's pickets without firing a shot, regardless of a sharp fire on its left flank from the enemy's picket reserve, which was posted on the high ground on which the Lan-drum house stands. It continued up the slope about haif way to the enemy's line, when the men broke into a tremendous cheer. and spontaneously taking the double quick they rolled like an irresistible they rolled like an irresistible wave into the enemy's works, tearing away what abatis there was in front of the intrenchments with their hands and carrying the line at all points in a few moments, although it was desperately de-fended. Barlow's and Birney's divisions entered almost at the same moment, striking the enemy's line at a salient immediately in in front of the Landrum house. A flerce and bloody fight ensued in the works with bayonets and clubbed muskets. It was short, however, and resulted in the capture of nearly four thousand prisoners of Johnson's division of Ewell's corps, twenty pieces of artillery, with horses, calssons and material complete, several thousand stand of small arms and upwards of thirty colors. Among the prisoners were Major Edward Johnson and Brigadier General George H. Steuart of the confederate service. The enemy fled in great confusion and disorder. Their loss in killed and wounded was unusually great. The interior of the intrenchments presented a terrible and ghastly spectacle of dead, most of whom were killed by our men with the bayonet when they penetrated the works. So thickly were the dead at this point that at many places the bodies were touching and piled upon each other."

The Charge. There are no more interesting details of the Wilderness fighting than the daily memoranda kept at headquarters of the Second corps by Major W. G. Mitchell, aide to General Hancock Here is the story of the preparation for the charge at daybreak on the 12th. "At 10 p. m. the corps moved toward Brown's house, near Ny river, where we had examined the ground in the evening. Night exceedingly dark and roads very rough: men tired and worn out, but kert well closed up and moved along briskly; no accidents save one, when some pack mules laden with enreaching tools ran away and made some confusion under the supposition that we had marched into the enemy. When the troops arrived at the Brown house they were quiety marched in front of our intrenchments near to the enemy's picket line, so as to be ready for the intended assault in the morning. This was accomplished without noise or confusion, and was most happily favored by an exceedingly dark night. The men, coo, knowing that we were near the enemy, and that we were engaged in a perilous undertaking, kept remarkably quiet during the whole movement. Before day-light the troops were formed for assault as follows: Birney's division on the right in two lines of battle, but a few paces sep-arated; Barlow's division in column of regiments, doubled on the center; Gibbon's and Mott's divisions in the rear of Barlow and Birney, in two lines of battle, each division with but very short intervals, thus making almost a solid rectangular mass of nearly twenty thousand men to hurl upon the e emy's works as soon as it should be suffi-ciently light for our purpose."

Then came the charge, of which Major Mitchell says: "A dense fog fell before daylight, and we all stood shivering with cold and wet until 4:30 a.m., when the fog lifted somewhat and the command was given to advance. The whole corps stepped off the same moment, and in about three hundred yards marched over the enemy's picket, who were so astounded at our appearance, marching on them out of the fog, that they never fired a shot, nor did we, but moved right over them. The first fire we received was from the picket reserve stationed at the Landrum house, about half way between the point at which we formed for the assault and the enemy's works. Their fire killed Colonel Stricker, Second Delaware volunteers, and a few men. A regiment was sent to disperse them, and our column kept on to capture the works, which we found to be about one-half mile from our point of formation. The ground was open and rolling from the Landrum house to the works, and the troops dashed over it in the works, and the troops dashed over it in the works. fine style, not meeting a heavy fire until when within about three hundred yards; the Irish brigade then gave a wild cheer and imrish brigade then gave a wild cheer and immediately the enemy opened a tremendous fire of musketry on us over the parapets with some artillery, but nothing could now stop our men, who rushed up to the works, and,
tearing the abatis away with their hands, poured in like a great wave, driving the enemy out pell-mell with clubbed muskets and bayonets, capturing twenty pieces of artillery and nearly four thousand prisoners tillery and nearly four thousand prison reports Major Mitchell, "to Colonel Beaver, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Pennsylvania volunteers. The prisoners got mixed up among our own men in the works, and were dodging in all directions from the bullets of their friends, who were firing upon us as they fell back. In the midst of this confusion and crowd a soldier attracted my attention and crowd a soldier attracted my attention by shouting out to me, 'Major Mitchell, here is a rebel general.' I at once. de up to General Steuart, who gave me als name and rank, and I directed a captain of the Fifty-third Pennsylvania volunteers to conduct him to General Hancock. When Steuart was taken to the general the latter, who knew him before the war, held out his hand, saying, 'How are you, Steuart!' The latter replied, 'Under the circumstances, I decline to take your hand.' 'And under any other circumstances I should not have offered it.' said cumstances I should not have offered it, said General Hancock.

Of what followed this capture of the angle, or Salient, at daybreak, Mitchell says: "Fighting continued unceasingly and desperately over the captured works; the enemy made desperate efforts to regain them, throwing their strength upon the salient angle held by the Second and Sixth corps. Our force at that point was exceedingly strong three or four deep in some places. The enemy persisted in their attack until about midnight of the 12th, but were forced to abandon their position and leave us possession of the works which the Second corps had so gallantly carried. In this battle stantly under heavy musketry twenty hours. During the night the enemy withdrew into a second line o works, and is the morning the captured entrenchments prosented a terrible specially of dead and wounded, who were, indeed, piled upon each other for several hundred yards; the result of one of the most brilliant and deadly outtles of this great war. The enemy cannot have lost less than 12,000 to 15,000 men killed. wounded and captured this day - the hardest blow they have yet received in this campaign. Nothing could exceed the splendid intrepidity of our gallant officers and soldiers during this bloody contest. Harry Bingham of our staff badly wounded in the thigh."

Died as a coldier.

Monterey and the state of Nuevo Leon, Mex., has been the theatre of many military tragedies, but the shooting of Salvator Estuperron, second lieutenant of the Mexican cavalry, on the morning of May 19, was the saddest that has ever darkened the annals of the state, says a correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, A brief history of the event which led to the execution is necessary to a proper understanding of the case. Last December a company of the Thirteenth regular cavalry was ordered to do special duty at Cadereyta, a small town on the Gulf road. The company was in command of a first lieutenant and the deceased. A dispute arose between the officers, and Lieutenant Estepurron fearing, as his frienes say, that his life was in danger, drew his pistol, but did not shoot at his superior. It is claimed that he snapped the pistol, but it missed fire. For this offense he was placed under arrest and tried by a general court-martial and sentenced to death. There were extenuating circumstances admitted and the case was carried to the highest Federal courts. Pending a decision the first officer of the company was shot dead in the portals at Monterey by one of his soldiers, and the soldier, while yet the smoke was curling from his weapon, was shot down by the captain of the company, Whether these deaths affected the pardoning power or not will never be known, but the finding of the court was approved, and powerful personal appeals by persons intimately associated with President Diaz were una-vailing. The death warrant was signed and carried into execution. That the officer was admired by the people and dearly loved in his regiment was well known by the authorities, as the precautions taken by the com-mandant of the department were ample proof. The time of the shooting was kept a pro-found secret. The cathedral clock chimed four. There was a sharp bugle call, a hurrying of mustering feet, quick commands and rapid evolutions and in a few moments the garrison fell into line. The gate in the rear of the barracks was opened, and the 13th Cavalry, in full marching order, on foot, issued forth, followed by their band, with muffled instruments. The 5th Cavalry followed, and then the 5th Infantry. They formed a square, three sides of which consisted of the respective regiments. The fourth was the wall of the barracks. The general commanding the department, and staff, took up a position in the center. When the troops halted the commanding officer called, "attention!" "Fix bayonets!" He then announced the sentence, and added:

"If any man moves in the ranks or gives any expression of sympathy with the pris-oner or fault with the sentence he shall be committed to prison from one to five years, depending on the gravity of the offense."

The silence as of death, fell upon the soldiers and the few spectators who who were allowed to be present. Afar off the church beil tolled the knell of the dying. The early sun just gilded the mountain peakes that rise like giant sentinels around the historic city and one's thoughts went back to the dull gray morning long ago, when an American soldier knelt upon his coffin and met a oloody death almost on the same spot. Great white wreaths circled the higher hills. It is now wreaths gircled the higher From out the gate issued a company of the Thirteenth, at its head a prisoner and by his side a priest. With a firm tread and a proudly lifted head he marched, never fattering or halting, but with a bright smile upon his face, he looked the least concerned of the party. He halted at a small marked elevation twenty feet from the barracks wall. His company filed past and formed in front, four files deep. Two lines advanced, halted, and one still advanced. There were six men in each line. The firing party thus consisted of six men in the front line within ten feet of the prisoner, and the second line within fif-teen feet. The other two lines formed a restruck 5. The officer advanced to bandage the eyes of the prisoner, but the latter walved the officer aside, and said:

"I have looked too often in the face of death to fear him now."
"It shall be as you wish," said the captain, as he took his place at the left of the firing party. Taking off his hat, the prisoner surveyed the assembled troops, looked once at the sun-tipped hills and said to the firing party: "Shoot straight for my heart, but do not strike my face. Adieu." And bringing his hands to the position of "attention," he awaited the end. There was a slight flash of the captain's sword. The guns came to, "Ready!" Another flash. "Aim!" The blade drops. Six sheets of flame dart toward the prisoner, who sprang into the air with three bullets in his heart. The surgeon took his wrist. The captain gave a quick com-mand, a soldier stepped from the ranks, and placing his rifle to the prisoner's head, fired. n less than fifty seconds from the drop of the sword Lieutenant Estuperron was dead. The bugles sounded. The troops filed past the body; it was put into a coffin and the grim tragedy was over-and as brave a man as ever buckled on a sword had crossed to the "bivouac of the dead."

Deadly Work of a Negress. "A most singular incident occurred here today," Major Michell of General Hancock's staff writes in his headquarters daily memoranda of the Wilderness campaign. "We had several guns in position behind a rifle pit which ran through the yard of the Shelton house, occupied by the troops of Brooke's brigade. These guns were firing rapidly at some batteries of the enemy placed on the other side of Swift Run. In the Shelton house were several ladies who had refused to leave, notwithstanding the danger; they had taken refuge in the cellar and had with them a negress, who, when the fire was about the hottest, became delirious from fright, and, picking up a fire shovelful of live coals from the hearth, rushed out into the yard and threw the coals into one of the gun-limbers exploding the ammunition it contained, kill-ing two men, I believe, and burning the eyes out of one or two others. The negress, who was unburt, ran into the house again as if the devil was after her and nearly scared to death by what she had done. Colonel Brooke, Fifty-third Pennsylvania volunteers, witness this affair with many other officers. I myself arrived on the ground just as the men whose eyes had been burned out were being taken off the field. It was not supposed that the negress had any intention of doing such mischief. She was so crazy that none bemischief. She was so crazy that none be-lieved she knew what she had done."
