Dilsaver Still In It.

The arguments in the habeas corpus proceedings of William Dilsaver against Marshal J. L. Templeton were resumed before Judge Smith vesterday. But little new material was woven into the speeches and the case was at last submitted to the court. He took the matter under advisement and last evening rendered his decision. In his opinion he stated that it was not necessary to decide whether a man who was convicted under a void ordinance has a right to be released on a writ of habeas corpus or on an appeal. He states that the sole reason why the plaintiff alleges that his confinement is illegal is that the city has no right or authority to make the keeping of a disorderly house a misdemeanor or impose a fine on the keeper. The case of Smith against Bigelow, in the opinic of the court, was decided adversesy to th this view of the case. He states that the petition alleges that certain things constitute the keeping of a disorderly house which do not come under that head according to section 456 of the code. He considers the application for the writ faulty in that it does not conform to the provisions of the statute, which provides that when a writ of habeas corpus is asked for the petition shall state that the confinement is illegial, and wherein, on these grounds the petition is dismissed and the plaintiff remanded to the custody of the city unestinl In speaking of the case vesterday afternoor Colonel Dalley stated that in case it should be decided against his client, he would in all probability take an appeal to the supreme court. The supreme court has decided several times that cities have no right to pass laws fixing a fine or other penalty to the selling of intexicating liquors, and he has no joubt what the final result will be. The city authorities state that if the case is decided against them by the supreme court, every saloon in the city will be closed.

Higgins, a trio, flute, cornet and plano, by Frank Badollet, Will Murphy and Miss Maud Cavin; a flute and plano dust by Masses Badollet, and Sims plano duet by Messrs. In Custody of Her Husband. The famous Bresce insanity case was brought into court again yesterday by the flipg of an application for a writ of habcas corpus for Mrs. Emma Bresee. The application was filed by Attorney G. F. Boulton, and in it he alleges that she was in confinement for insanity, when in fact she was not insane. Balliff Wall McFadden notified the parties who were interested in the case, and County Attorney J. A. Berry and Attorney S. I. King of Logan and County Supervisors Gilmore and Satteriee, came down to attend the trial. After the evidence had been heard by Judge Deemer ne stated that so far as he could see the plaintiff had failed to show that she was under restraint. The county supervisors had given her into the custody of her husband after she had been exagined and found to be harmlessly insane, and that ever since that time she had been free to go and come at her own free will, so that it was hard to see what ground she had for wanting a writ of habeas corpus. He accordingly decided that her plea was ground-less, and the case was dismissed.
