A SHADOW ON THE MOON.

Story of How a Printer Tricked a Cheyenne Editor. In 1890 I spent the summer months...

On Friday morning, August 5, they left with two wagons well stocked...

When the wagons had turned the corner I picked up Slick's political...

"The republican party points with pride to the splendid ticket nominated at the Chicago convention...

Having nothing particular to do Sunday morning, I strolled into the office...

"THE REPUBLICANS STAND NO SHOW" our readers will find with delight the announcement that the Mousetrap...

After running off the copy I have shown you and another one, I unlocked the form, took out the matter, distributed it and put back the original...

horses and rode at break-neck speed across the country in the direction of Georgetown...

When the frenzied editor reached Georgetown he rushed into the telegraph office and sent me the following dispatch...

"You nondescript exile from Hades, look out for me. I am coming to boom the editor's business, Slick."

I showed the telegram to the foreman assuming an air of blissful ignorance and asked Jim what he thought of that.

He shook his head and remarked that he felt very sorry for Slick, but he knew the boss could not withstand the temptation...

"The foreman had prepared the boys for the misfortune that had overtaken their employer, and at a propitious moment he was seized by four of the strongest men...

"My poor friend Slick," I replied, "what can you be dreaming of. The paper has been printed along fine, and we have received the praise of all the republicans of this section."

"There he is claiming to be as innocent as a lamb. If I were free from these shackles I would tear you limb from limb and freeze your treacherous heart to the wheels."

"The office boy brought the file and Slick turned to the issue of August 6. As he glanced at the editorial page his eyes grew abnormally large...

Finally he looked at us in a most abject manner, and when we asked him to speak he slowly told us that he was sure he saw the picture of Hancock and English at the top of the page while at Sulphur Springs...

"My poor fellow," I at last chimed in, "you must go straight to bed and take care of yourself, or you will be a corpse. So do, like a good fellow, come home with us and we will nurse you back to life."

"No, for God's sake, no," pitifully pleaded Slick. "I would die as I stand, but I never thought that I would come to this. But I swear to you that I will never take another drink of liquor as long as I live."

"We took him home through the alleys and left him there as docile as a kitten, and there he remained for over a week. I called on him daily, and when he was all right again he thanked me for the brotherly interest I showed in his behalf and offered me the city editorship of the paper."

"I told him that I would not have it as a gift, and related to him that five years ago, when I held a position on one of the Denver dailies, he got one of my relatives to write to me about that same position at his office. He never offered me, and in the letter my relative said that I could rely on the situation, and that all that was to be arranged were the terms. On the strength of this I had written him on the Denver paper and wrote to him twice. But he was not gentleman enough to reply to my letters, much less compensate me for the loss of a good position."

"That," I guess, Mr. Slick, we're even on it, that old score. Good bye, sir, good bye."

"When your heart is bad, and your head is bad, and you are bad through, what is needed?" asked a Sunday school teacher of his class. "I know—Ayer's Sarsaparilla."

OF INTEREST TO THE FARMER.

The farmer who has no preference as to breeds but starts out to buy a good bull to use on his common cattle, and visits representative herds of the different beef breeds, will find much to surprise him. In spite of the claims of some of the breed partisans, he will find that those breeds that are bred with the same object in view, have with the exception of color and fewer characteristics, the same general excellencies and to a great extent the same defects, the same form and similar feeding qualities.

Separate the males from the females as soon as they begin to mature; they will thrive all the better for it.

Turkeys are fond of potato bugs, and if it becomes necessary to use paris green in the potato patch, care should be taken to keep the turkeys out, for they will soon be found to kill themselves. If fowls are penned up in very close quarters, without regard to the number thus crowded together, it is quite impossible for them to be available as breeders.

The Cincinnatian Enquirer gives this remedy for "bumble foot" in fowls: When toes and feet swell up and with matter, wash till clean with salicylic acid, then cut open the puffy protuberance and let out the gathering puss freely.

How shall I start? We have the above question asked very frequently by those who want to do a little poultry raising, there is a fortune to be made in breeding fancy poultry. To such we would say start on a small scale. If you have made a success of common fowls that is to your advantage in this way you have learned many of the peculiarities of the birds you are to handle.

The Creamery Business. In contemplating the present magnitude of the creamery business it is hard to realize how short has been the time that has been required to bring it to its present proportions.

Messrs. Mosin & Co. have established at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, a butter business. They supply farmers with pans holding seven gallons each, in which to set milk, and every day or two send their own teams out on a collecting tour of ten miles circuit, and bring in the cream for churning.

From this "butter business on a novel basis" in Iowa in 1890, has sprung up a butter business that in 1890 exported 73,000,077 pounds of butter, besides supplying the home demand of that state.

A California correspondent of the Rural Press says that the establishment at Soquel turns out daily from forty-five to fifty thousand pounds of butter, and when they did for only 4 cents, and this man has since last May so educated these people to cleanliness that he makes 32 cent butter from the cream of the milk of these same cows that before made only 1 cent gross.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is on the flood tide of popularity. It has reached by its own intrinsic, undoubted merit.

How to make them grow the fastest is the next thing to consider. If the sows are not required to produce another litter the same year it would be best to let the pigs suck so long as the mother will continue to give milk, and feed them at the same time. If this is practiced the sow must be fed all she will eat of succulent food, of which barley makes best, with a regular allowance of shelled corn.

Between 50,000,000 and 100,000,000 codfishes are taken from the sea around the shores of Newfoundland every year. But even that quantity of the end of three months and confining them for a few days in a pen until weaned, when they ought to be allowed to go upon the ground and lie in the sun. We have a fancy they will do better if the sunshine can fall upon them. If confined on a plank floor they will wither and rot in their legs; and then they do not have the healthful influence of the ground and a chance to doctor themselves, following the prescriptions of instinct and getting their medicines from the laboratory of nature. Hogs are blessed with good digestion, and can eat often. When young they ought to be fed every two hours, eating their mess up clean. They should never be overfed. Charcoal and water are accessible and if it will eat a considerable quantity. Sulphur is a good corrective.

Reasonable Hints About Poultry. F. A. Mortimer in Poultry Monthly: If your fowls are drooping, examine them for lice. If they are found, use insect powder.

seems small when we consider that a single cod yields something like 3,500,000 eggs each year, and that over 8,000,000,000 eggs have been found in the roe of a single cod. A herring of six or seven ounces in weight is provided with 30,000,000 ova. After making a reasonable allowance for the destruction of eggs and of the young it has been calculated that in three years a single pair of herrings will produce 154,000,000.

FREAKS OF MEMORY.

The Case of a Young Woman Who Had Two Separate Lives.

Three extraordinary instances of what doctors call "periodic amnesia" were related to me by a prominent physician attached to the New York hospital, says a writer in the New York Telegram. The first was that of a young American woman, who on awaking from a protracted sleep lost memory of all she had before learned. Her memory had been so completely obliterated that she had no recollection of her own name, and she had to have lost every trace of acquired knowledge. All vestiges both of words and things were obliterated. By new efforts she again acquired the art of spelling, reading, writing, and calculating, and gradually became acquainted with persons and objects, like a being for the first time brought into the world. In these exercises she made considerable proficiency. After a few months she recovered her memory, and she was discovered to have lost every trace of acquired knowledge. All vestiges both of words and things were obliterated. By new efforts she again acquired the art of spelling, reading, writing, and calculating, and gradually became acquainted with persons and objects, like a being for the first time brought into the world.
