CONCEALED AN AWFUL CRIME.

An Abandoned Woman Relieves Her Buried Conscience on Her Deathbed. She and Her Paramours Hanged the Old Man and Then Killed the Little Ones to Prevent Discovery.

At St. Paul, Pa., July 22.—A startling story comes from one of the lumber camps at Kettle Creek, this county, the truth of which interested parties have started out to investigate. In April, 1889, the people of all this region were horrified by the news that Frank Hancock, a lumber man living at Blue Run, near the Potter county line, had murdered four of his children and committed suicide by hanging himself in his house.

The news was made known by Hancock's wife, who had been absent from home on the night of the tragedy. Her story was that she had gone home and found the four children lying dead, some in the house and some in the yard. They had been stabbed and fearfully mutilated with a big butcher knife. The oldest child was eleven years old. A fifth child, a babe, was asleep and unharmed in a pool of blood at the side of one of its murdered sisters.

A note, apparently in the handwriting of her husband, was found in the house, in which he confessed the terrible crime. Hancock was a man of desire to rid his wife of himself and little ones because of her conduct. At the coroner's inquest it was developed that Hancock was jealous of his wife with good cause and that he had frequently upbraided her for her unfaithfulness. It was also shown that the day before the butchery at Blue Run, Hancock and John Conroy, a man with whom he was intimate, had frequently charged her with being unfaithful, were nearly all day together in the woods. The fact was brought out also that the choreography of Mrs. Hancock resembled in a remarkable manner that of her husband. Those who knew Frank Hancock well referred to believe that he could have committed so horrible a crime without his wife's aid. Hancock declared him guilty of, but on the strength of the evidence submitted a verdict to the effect that he had murdered his children and his wife was ruled sane.

Not long afterward, two aprons, said to belong to Mrs. Hancock, were found after an outdoor search of the woods. The aprons were soaked with blood. After the coroner's investigation was over Coagley left Blue Run and came to this place to work in the lumber camps. He has made no secret of the fact that he was in constant fear that detectives were following him and the appearance of every stranger in Austin aroused the greatest uneasiness. Hancock's feeling grew on him and he finally displayed suddenly and his whereabouts have since been reported to the coroner. She was soon heard of as an abandoned hanger-on of the lumber camps, living with the boys that roamed the timber. It is known what disposition she made of the babe that escaped the fate of its brothers and sisters on that bloody night at the Blue Run cabin.

A few days ago a messenger from the Kettle Creek camp went to Concordport to get the bodies of the children. He had a confession which he did not accept. He had a confession which he did not accept. He had a confession which he did not accept.
