giving reports of sales in San Francisco in the stock boards and in the street. Policeman with their clubs marched up and down in front of the bulletin boards to open a passage on the sidewalk. In passing these throngs ladies were often observed to linger to catch a quotation, or if very much interested would halt on the skirts of the crowd and ask some ac-

as they had at first talked of. "No," said John. "I can have $50,000 just as easily as a beggarly $10,000.

Everybody assures me that the grand boom is yet to come." "My dear," said the wife, "$10,000 is a nice round sum. It would make us comfortable for life if judiciously invested in Catifornia. Half of it would buy as large a ranch as we shall ever want. We could use $1,000 or $2,000 in making improve ments and the remainder could be placed at interest. The long wished for day has come, John. At last, if we will we may

"Blast the vine and fig tree!" cried John, greatly to his wife's astonishment. "I don't want a vine, neither do I hanker after a dratted old lig tree! No. What I am now after is a big cattle ranch, and that is what I'll have. It is in cattle, my dear, that one may become rich—that one may become a millionaire almost without knowing how. It is in cattle that big fortunes are made. I'm now figuring on it."

Better figure on our little California ranch, John.

"Bother take the California ranch! It is wonderful, my dear, how cattle count up-it is almost miraculous how they increase and multiply. Besides, my dear, flocks and herds are the true wealth of man from the earliest ages. Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and others of the patriarchs of old, with their cattle on a thousand hills! I will have herds as had Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and others of the patriarchs of old, with their cattle on a thousand hills! I have herds as had Abraham and Lot, when the number of their cattle was so great that they were obliged to separate

It was a figure of speech used in regard to the future-the time when 'nation shall not lift up the sword against nation, neither learn war any more.' You alarm yourself unnecessarily. No woman has nerve for successful speculation. Now, my dear, let me tell you that I am on the inside in this speculation—that is about the same as on the inside. I have this very day had pointers from two or three of the shrewdest stock dealers on the Comstock, and I am just as sure of drawing out the $50,000 I want as though I already had it in my hands."

"My dear, are those 'shrewdest dealers' just the persons one should go to for points?" "I grasp the insinuation, my dear; but let me tell you that the men I speak of are my friends—men who care nothing for a trifling $10,000—wouldn't look at it Mrs. Roberts sighed and changed the subject, bringing her husband back to the sad and sober realities of life by forming him that the wood was all out, that the milk bill was due and that the landlord had called for his rent. In two or three days after the foregoing conversation stocks began to tumble. Soon there was quite a scare, then a regular panic. John Roberts stood aghast before the bulletin boards and saw his thousands melting away. His friends, the "shrewdest operators, told him the break was 'only temporary," and advised him to 'double up" and "reduce his average." But how was a moneyless man to 'double up?" As he stood pale and sick among the groaning and cursing throng, John Roberts felt that he was already pretty thoroughly "doubled up."

Presently John's broker informed him manded that it be made good, and said that unless he put up more money stocks must go. John thought of the $250 in his wife's possession. He disliked asking for it, but finally he hinted to Mary that it might save him. "The lower levels of the mines," said John, 'have never looked better than at present and there is sure to be a rally

n the price of shares." "It wouldn't be sending good money after bad, my dear," said Mrs. Roberts. "It would be throwing the rope after the bucket. Tell your broker to sell you out and save himself."

"John Roberts had not for some days past said a word about Texas or mentioned the name of Bullard. Nowhe was thunderstruck. Even his wife seemed to have turned against him; at events she appeared determined to hold on to her $250. After musing for some moments, dur ing which time he turned white, red

Mrs. Roberts. "You know, my dear, I wanted you to add my $250 to yours, but you refused to take it. Well, an hour after you left the house I went to the broker you had named and asked him what stocks you had ordered. He told me, and I then gave him my $250 and told him to order me the same number of shares on the same terms. I then told the broker to keep my investment secret from you and all others, and to exactly follow with my money every move he made with yours. The broker promised all I asked and faithfully kept his word

"Bah! The idea of you going into stocks, my dear! Not one woman out of a thousand can make money in stocks! Followed me! Yes, and a nice pickle we are in!"

"My dear, give me credit for a few grains of sense and prudence. Had we sold out when I begged you to do so we would have made $20,000 clear. is true this sum would not have purchased such a cattle ranch in Texan as you had set your heart upon, but it would not have been bad to begin with. "John, I'll say no more."

"Right, Mary, let us have no more about Texas cattle ranches or vines and fig trees in California. We are now without a penny. We must anew set foot to the bottom round of the ladder. 'After all, John, I am sorry that you will not hear of the vine and fig tree. When I told the broker to follow you in every move you made, I also told him that should my venture prosper, I would myself come to him and tell him when to sell for me. I went on the very next day after that on which I had tried in vain to induce you to sell, and ordered all my stocks sold. As for John Roberts, he had the last lingering symptom of his Texas craze bounced out of his body before he had peen on the ranch a month. He purchased of a retiring vaquero a second-hand rig—lasso, Spanish spurs and all—then made his first essay as a cowboy, mounted upon a plow horse, for a dash around his barnyard after an old cow. Finding himself unsteady when his Bucephalus was put upon a trot, he tried to cling to the beast by anchoring his big spurs in its sides. The result was after a series of astonishing jolts he was landed head first up to his shoulders in a compost hear. After John had considered this ex-

They were then fresh in your mind, John?" "Confound that fellow, Buck Bullard! I have never told you the worst of him. He borrowed money of everybody and paid nobody. I-I-that is, he beat me out of a few dollars. Why, I have found that the fellow never owned a cattle ranch in Texas; and further, he was run out of the country for cattle-stealing."

That same day John told his hired men that they would thenceforward have sole and full charge of all the horses on the ranch. Next he made his man a present of his vaquero outfit. Soon after his wife, peeping out through the honeysuckles that shaded the veranda, saw him among the trees and vines with a big pruning-knife in his hand. Gazing for a few moments, Mary turned away with a smile on her lips. At last John had settled down to busi-
