SOME NOTED WOMEN.

The girl that makes an attractive woman is not so easily picked out from among her fellows. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe began Greek at 70, and now at 72 she has just read the plays of Sophocles in the original.

Mrs. Mary Washington Fineh, a grand-daughter of General Washington, has the nearest thing to the historic little hatchet—a silver one made from a spoon once owned by the Father of his Country. Beatrice Kipling, a sister of Rudyard, has just finished a novel called the "Heart of the Maid." Every one is anxious to read it in order to find out if the talent for story writing is possessed by all the Kipling family. Julia Marlowe, the actress, is said to have a wonderful memory. As a test not long ago she committed to memory and recited the entire letter of Baron Fava to Secretary Blaine after it had been read out twice in her presence.

Mrs. Emily Kempin, the lawyer, is a slender woman of the German type, and a good mother to her four children. She is a gradu-ate of the University of Zurich, and when the university on her shapely head.

Frau Bismarck is said to be economical even to the extent of parsimony. She is afflicted with a mild form of melancholia, and is always imagining that her health is more delicate than it is. She is a white haired woman of more than 60 years, with promi-nent cheek bones, a tall figure and high keyed voice. She talks with considerable volubility, and has a fund of funny stories and anecdotes. Next to her fondness for her husband her consuming passion is for champagne, which, against her physician's orders, she refuses to renounce.

Fate of a Union Scout.

The signs of war the past month in East Tennessee, with the mountaineer arrayed against the military and civic power of the state, recalls the days of 61, when members of the same family arrayed themselves, bade each other good bye and took different paths to serve the cause they thought to be the true one. Often these partings were not peaceful ones, and the separation sometimes followed bloodshed. As the war grew older, confederate recruiting parties paid frequent visits to the valleys of the Cumberland peaks, and many a strong unionist was forced to enlist under the bars and stripes of rebellion. These conscripts were not good soldiers for the southern cause, and invariably escaped at the first favorable opportun-

It often happened that a conscript deserter, knowing it was perilous for him to visit his home, made his way as directly as possible to Nashville, within the union lines, enlisted and donned the suit of blue in the army of Uncle Sam.

So it happened that when Colonel Streight of Indiana made his famous raid into Georgia in the spring of 1864, in an abortive attempt to destroy the arsenal at Rome and draw away Bragg's cavalry from the front of Rosencrans, then at Tullahoma, he had in his command as guides and scouts some fifty East Tennesseeans, picked from regiments at Nashville for this special duty. These mountaineers proved invaluable to the command in piloting it through the passes and defiles of the rugged country in which Streight's roughriders operated. They knew all the short cuts, the fords and good stands for battle when the column was pursued and attacked, as it was almost daily from the start of the expedition by the rebel On May 4 Streight and his little band of raiders stacked their guns and surrendered to the superior force of General Forrest, the famous confederate cavalry leader. Among those surrendered were the hardy scouts and guides. Of their number was a Tennesseean from Waldron's Ridge, in the locality where these mining troubles now exist, named Albert Wintermuth. Wintermuth was a dar-ing fellow and had done excellent service on the raid both as guide and on the skirmish line in the daily bouts with Forest's men before the capture. He and the writer, who was a member of an Ohio regiment in Streight's command, had fraternized in the early days of the disastrous expedition and before the day of capitulation, had become sworn

After the surrender, the federal soldiers were taken to Rome and corraled on the bank of the Coosa river, near the little city, surrounded by a heavy guard. Wintermuth was noticeably nervous, He seemed to lose all his reckless bearing after his carbine had left his hands. The reason for this sudden change came out later. On the first morning after our bivounce on the shore of the Coosa a file of confederate soldiers marched by the guard into the camp. The prisoners, 1,300 in number, were ranged in single file on the four sides of the inclosure. The officer, the captain of regimental company, who headed the squad of the newcomers, then passed along the lines. With him were two women. They seemed to be of the ordinary type of southern women one met in those days in the little farm houses in the mountain regions of Tennessee or the Carolinas. The elder one was per-haps 45, while the younger, though sallow-faced, was rather comely and scarcely 20 years of age.

Wintermuth and I stood side by side in the line. There was much wonderment among the men as to the purpose of this inspection. A slight tremor of the arm that touched my own on the right caused me to look at Wintermuth. His face was corpselike, but not a word escaped him. The officer and the women in his company were approaching, closely scanning each man in the lines as they stood with heads bared for the scrutiny. When the eyes of Wintermuth and the women met, there was a flash of recognition, betraying hatred, too, on the part of the visitors.

When the younger female had quickly scanned the face of my comrade, she said sharply: "That's the man. Your name is Al Wintermuth." Not a word fell from the lips of Win-termuth, but as his face took on a deeper pallor, I felt the tremor in his arm His muscles seemed to be almost rigid. "Step out here," said the officer. Wintermuth obeyed. A motion of the hand to the file of confederate soldiers, who had been quietly standing at order arms, brought them to where the cap-"March this man to the guard house away. The two women passed without the lines as they had come in the company of the officer. Within ten days after Wintermuth left the lines he was dead. "Court-martialed and shot for desertion and serving with the enemy," was the entry on the roster aftea his name. His story was learned after the war. Business called me into that part of Tennessee from which Wintermuth had come and from relatives the facts were gleaned. His family were staunch unionists. The father and three sons had enlisted in a Kentucky union regiment. Albert being the youngest remained at home. He was paying court to a young girl in the Sequatchie valley, whose family (the Egglers) were all ardent supporters of the confederacy. The engagement was broken off by the ill-feeling engendered by war. Wintermuth was conscripted into a Georgia regiment, deserted and joined a Tennessee battalion in Rosecrans' army. The families became bitter enemies. The Egglers, driven out of their home by the change in the shifting tide of war, had gone to Georgia, and mother and daughter were visiting a brother and son stationed with his regiment at Rome when Streight's men rode through the streets as prisoners. They saw and recognized Wintermuth. Their story was soon reported to the provost martial, and, willingly or unwillingly, the woman who had once promised to be the
