G. H. Webster Brings a Suit Which Opens Up His Business Record.

FIGHTING FOR JOHN MANNING'S RICHES

Acers of a Dead Man the caus of a Law Suit - Price of an Eye-Other Short Court

News.

George H. Webster is gone, but his memory flourishes with some of his former asso ciates in this city. His business methods were so distinctively his own that it fre quently happened that other parties could not be induced to accept them, and this led to several changes of partnership in firms with which Mr. Webster happened to be connected. This state of affairs is recalled by a suit that was begun Tuesday, in which R. S. Belcher sues the Commercial Directory company for $400. Both plaintiff and de fendant were formerly among Webster's sorrowing partners, and Mr. Webster is a the bottom of the suit.

It seems that Webster, who was president of the idirectory company, lost the confidence of his partners as they began to realize that the concern did not make money as fast as it should, and as he had full charge of the bookkeeping they began to devise ways and means of getting him to step down and out. Mr. Webster, however, knew when he had a good thing and was not disposed to let go. His partners were convinced that onless they could get rid of him he would not only bank-rupt the company, but everything connected with it as well, so they concluded to pay him to sell out, and to that end en-tered into a contract with him to give him $5,000 and take his stock off his hands at par besides.

Thus it happened that Mr. Webster was given an absolute decree of divorce from the directory company and he associated himself with Mr. Belcher in the Central National Building & Loan association. And here, too, there was trouble, and it again became advisable for Webster's partners to suggest his resignation.

The story of his disappearance from the city, leaving his tamily without money and the servant girl minus $150 which he had borrowed from her and $15 wages due, has already been published.

It now transpires that Webster assigned to Belcher his $1,000 contract with the directory company, which was to be paid in monthly payments, and on which there is now due the sum of $400. It is to collect this money that the suit is brought.

The defendant company, however, claims to have made discoveries since Webster was induced to sell out, and they have been able to get at the books and ascertain the true state of affairs, to the effect that he had covered up his shortages to the amount of $1,300 by misrepresenting the liabilities of the concorn, that he collected $700 for which he gave no credit or covered up by false entries, that inquiries indicate that another $150 was disposed of in the same manner, and there are still several counties to hear from. Further than this, the company has been garnisheed for the $165 that Webster owes the servant girl, Stena Christensen, and for another $250 that he owed H. B. Morrow on a promissory note. They refuse to pay the $400 on the face of these garnisuments and the evidences of indebtedness due the company from Webster, and maintain also that the contract was not assignable. The suit in no wise effects the standing of the company, which for some time has been a prosperous concern with the substantial backing of the Nebraska State Business Men's association, but brings to public notice another chapter of Mr. Web-

Hay.
On November 6, 1890, John Manning, aged
90 years, died at the home of the Hays, near Florence. He was possessed of considerable wealth, consisting partially of lands and lots in and near Florence. The landed property was valued at $20,000. There was no will and as the plaintiffs were the grandchildren of the deceased and the only heirs at law, they at once instituted probate proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining the condition of the Manning estate. After searching the records they discovered that on October 25, a few days before his death, Joseph Manning had deeded all of his property to Mary and Will-iam Hay, the defendants in the suit now on

An injunction was secured to restrain the Hays from disposing of the property and suit was brought to set aside the sale, the plaintiffs alleging that at the time of the transfer Manning was not in his right mind and that the sale was without consideration. Now the case is on trial, the plaintiffs asking that the transfer be set aside and that the title to the property pass to the rightful

Fox, the Frisco Forger Still in Charge of Officials.

There were several interesting develop ments in the case of Mortimer Fox, the young Frisco forger yesterday morning, the United States coming out on top as usual. Tuesday night at the instance of United States Attorney Baker Parke Godwin, counsel for Fox, and Sheriff Boyd, were arrested on the charge of resisting an officer, said resistance lying in the fact that the astute lawyer and energetic sheriff executed a neat coup d'etat Tuesday in keeping the prisoner out of the hands of the government

This morning, however, Goodwin aban-doned his habeas corpus suit, and thereupon the United States attorney dismissed his suit against Goodwin and the sheriff. Fox was then promptly levied upon by Deputy United States Marshal Lyon, and will now be held here pending the case of the government has against him for robbing the mails in San Francisco, after which the civil authorities of that city will be given a whack at him.

The case of Charles R. Kellogg against Lewis Klyne consumed nearly all of the afternoon. The lawyers required about two hours in which to present their arguments. Judge Ryan of Lincoln became quite aconic in describing the land owned by one of the Klyne brothers down in Kansas.

"That land down there in western Kansas, righteousness, the more you have of it the worse it is for you. That country is very dry I am told. It is so dry that men who raise hogs have to run them into a pond of water and let them soak a while before they give them swill. If they don't before they give them swill. If they don't soak the hogs in water before they give them the swill the animals can't hold the swill when they drink it." The jury took the case at 4 o'clock and soon returned a verdict favoring the defendant. Kellogg has sued for $2,300. The petit and grand jurors were given a vacation yesterday to permit them to enjoy

Her store was recently destroyed by fire, and the Moline, Milburn-Stoddard company and the McCormick Harvester MacLine company held a mortgage on her stock and effects. An attachment was issued in behalf of these firms and Deputy United States Marshal Lyon took possession, but was ousted on a replevin issued by the above mentioned justice, which was served by the constable.

Pacific Short Line Troubles to be Told Again in Court.

FRAUD ALLEGED BY A STOCKHOLDER.

Court is Asked to Set Aside the Sale and Appoint a New Trustee - History of the Case.

The days of the Nebraska & Western railroad, popularly known as the Pacific Short Line, have been few and full of trouble; but when it was sold four weeks ago to Garretson and Wickersham for $2,000,000, it was supposed that its ownership had been positively determined.

These four weaks, however, have been a period of fancied security, for litigation has broken out afresh and the title to the rail-road is again questioned. Ellis L. Bierbower, the receiver, has been advertising for the presentation of ciaims against him, and expected to make his final report to Judge Dundy by December 20. Now there is a possibility of his again being put in possession of the railroad, pending another series

James D. Negus of Denver, yesterday pre sented to in the United States circuit court sorning a petition in intervention ask-R. Carter at Fort Niebrara on | /ng that the sale of a month ago the 30th day of September last, Dixon is | be set aside and that the road be but 20 years of age, has been five years in remanded to the custody of the rethe service, and came from Hangara Proceiver. His petition is a rather lengthy document, but it gets at the inside manipulations in the building of the road and presents a statement of the relations of the railroad ompany, the construction company and the trustee of the bonds that makes an interesting story. The case is entitled, "The Manhattan Trust Company vs the Nebraska & Western Railway Company." The action was begun to foreclose a mortgage on the railroad be-cause the defendant defaulted in the payment of interest on its bonds. Negus alleges that he is a stockholder in the Nebraska & Western and has interests o the amount of $75,000 that are adversary to both the plaintiff and the defeedant suit. He sets forth that in 1886 and there after he organized the Wyoming & Eastern company in Wyoming, to build a railway by way of the valleys of the Platte and Water rivers and the South pass to the Utah line. He says the eastern end was to be con nected with the Nebraska & Western and the western end with the projected Salt Lake Valle / & Eastern, running through Utah. The plan was to consolidate the three reads ultimately under the name of the Pacific

Negus claims to have spent several years and a large sum in cash in procuring the right of way and franchises and making sur-veys for the three corporations. He values his services at $25,000 and outs his cash outlay at $63,000. He received stock in the Ne-braska & Western for the former claim, and was to be resulbursed for the money he ex-pended, but the latter agreement was never

Then follows a history of the construction company which built the road. Negus asserts that that corporation known as the Wyoming Pacific Improvement company, re-ceived for the 129 miles of road from Covington to O'Neill's stock of the Nebraska & Western to the amount of $2,583,000 and first mortgage bonds to a like amount, making aggregate $5,166,000. ges that the carry a fine line of wedding cards, letter heads, bill heads, and do all kinds of job printing. Country orders solicited.

balance of $650,000 has not been accounted for, and Negus thinks that this much of the loan was fictitious and was made to appear for the benefit of the Manhattan Trust com-

After showing that the officers of the Man hattan Trust company were the officers of the Improvement company, Negus' petition alleges that the decree for the sole of the road was obtained by fraud. He sets forth that in April, 1890, the Nebraska & Western issued bonds to the amount of $2,530,000, which had no coupons for the period prior to January 1, 1891, and were not to bear interest before that date. Subsequently and prior to October 15, 1829, Millard R. Jones resigned is president of the railroad company, and Donald McLean was chosen his successor. During that month while McLean was presdent, another set of bonds to the amount of $1,583,000 was made to take the place of the irst issue. The first bonds were destroyed The second had coupons for interest during the period prior to January 1, 1891. It was on the default of those coupons that the Manhattan Trust company began foreclosure pro

The petition alleges irregularities in the proceedings and sets forth various allegations of fraud, collusion and inequity. It enarges hat Garretson and Wickersham, who bid in the road for $2,000,000, owned the bonds and had bought them of the Manhattan for a few cents on the dollar. It sets forth that non-of the stock of the Neuraska & Western except that issued to Negus, was paid for, and that consequently all stockholders but he are adebted to the railroad corporation for such Negus, therefore, asks the court to aside the decree ordering the sale of the Ne-braska & Western; to depose the Manhattan Trust company as trustee and appoint auother; to declare the interest coupons sued upon to have been fraudulently and illegally issued; to require the receiver to begin suits against the stockholders of the railroad com-pany for the payment of their subscriptions; to require an investigation as to the amount actually paid for the bonds, and that so much and no more be declared a debt ugainst the railroad secured by the mortgage, and to cancel and annul the stock that was issued without consideration.

McLean was at South Sioux City a few days ago, and is quoted as saying that he thad not yet lost his foothold in Dakota county and some day would turn it upside It has been supposed in some quarters that this foreboded new development in the Short Line affair, but there is good reason for believing that McLean referred to an ontirely different enterprise.

Superintendent Moore. John D. Moore, the newly appointed superintendent of the Gulf division of the Union Pacific system, is a Grand Island man. He is an old Union Pacific man, having begun with a construction train on the grade in 1866. He was afterwards a freight and a passenger conductor, and in 1881 made freight agent at Grand Island. Seven years later he resigned and became successively vice-president and cashier of the Bank of Commerce in that city. His headquarters as superiatendent will be at Fort Worth.

Packing House Employes Startled by What Proved to Be Almost a Tragedy-Other Magic City Notes.

Two carloads of fine appearing but untamed horses were received at the stockyards yesterday from the far west and the breaking of the animals attracted a large crowd of people. A cowboy, who has great skill as a roper and horse trainer, was the central figure. His assistant was a sorrel pony and his paraphernalia two lassoes. When a horse was purchased the cowboy would ride into the enclosure where the untamed animal was confined and throw a lasso over the neck of the steed. This invariable resulted in a number of wild antics and running and rearing by the captured animal. The hase was fastened to the pommel of his saddle and the trained pony braced himself and kept his head constantly turned toward the fractious animal. Whether the rope was on his back or off, the pony did this part of the work just the same.

If the wild horse still exhibited signs of rebellion the cowboy would, by a dexterous movement, manage to get the other largat tangled in the animal's legs and then throw While prostrate a halter would be ed on and then the horse allowed to rise. By strategic movements the animal was forced to the fence, where the long, strong halter strap was hastily tied. After a few minutes' desperate pulling the animal ald invariably be forced to realize that he was a captive, and would accept the situation. The animal would then be led away as though accustomed to the halter all its life The fences were constantly linea with spectators while this interesting process was going on, among them being Mr. Babcock, superintendent of the stock yards, who sat on the fence and watched the operations until he almost froze. Almost any day hereafter this scene can be witnessed, as the trainer will be permanently retained, because the increasing business requires it, Mr. Babcock is very enthusiastic over the outlook for the market just established. Although the market has been in operation only three weeks, already 125 horses have been received. No soliciting has been made yet for the horse trade. The announcement was merely made that the barn was completed and ready for use. Word was received today from Oregon that ten car loads of horses were on the way here from that state. A telegram was also received from Wyoming that three car leads of horses will be sent soon from there.

Word has been received from Henry Grosshans of Sutton that he will be here shortly with a car load of steeds. A consignment of well bred saddle and driving norses will be shipped from northeast

Of this $1,900 was refunded. leaving a balance of $1.500 unpaid. Yester day Wilson shipped eighty nead of his cattle to Gassman & Dudley, commission merchants o dispose of on this market. Boyer, Shell-& Co., who represented the mortgagee, had Wilson arrested on the charge of selling mortgaged property without the usual con Wilson declared that he had cattle enough left to more than pay off the remaining portion of the mortgage and had no in tention of fraud; furthermore, that he had offered the representatives of the mortgagee the full proceeds of vesterday's sale-some $30, which was declined by the commission men, because they did not wish to lose the commission that they might have received Judge King was satisfied that Wilson in
