GRAND ARMY DEPARTMENT

A Monument to General Grant Favorably Considered in Congress.

SOME PENSION STATISTICS OF VALUE

A Soldier Brines Order Out of Chaos in Church-Brilliant Charge Led by a Runaway Horse-Fall of a Western Army Idol.

A favorable report has been made on the bill appropriating $300,000 for a monument to General Grant, to be erected in Washington. Whether the remains of the illustrious Grant are brought to Washington or not a nobie monument in his honor will be built-a monument to show that the American people honor themselves in remembering their heroes.

Pension Statistics

It is difficult to state with accuracy the whole number of men in our army during the late war, says the Chicago We know that there were 2,778,304 enlistments. The actual number of men who served more or less in the union forces is estimated at a little over than 2,000,000, as there were fully 700,000 re-enlistments. Some were for on month, some for two months, some for four months, some for one year, some for two, and some for three years. More than 300,000 men enlisted just before the close of the war, few of whom saw any active service. But the claim agents have managed to get a large part of them on the pension rolls. If we calculate on the basis of three years' service to each man we dequee the following table, showing the number of men furnished by the states, with the deaths from all causes, the number on the pension rolls from such states, the percentage of deaths from all causes to the number of men furnished, and the centage of pensioners on the roll last July:

The figures in the foregoing table, giving the number of men now on the pension rolls, are taken from the report f the commissioner of pensions of July 30, 1891. The number of pensioners on the rolls February 1, 1892, is fully 150, 000 more than at that date, as Commissioner Raum has been filing orders at the rate of 1,000 per day under the dependent pension act of two years ago. The number of persons now drawing pensions is about 800,000. In a year more they will exceed 1,000,000. The other figures are taken from a book entitled "Regimental Losses in the Civil War, by Major William F. Fox. data used by Major Fox were obtained by him from the War department. He estimates the number of men in the union armies at about 2,000,000, first and last. The highest number at one time was 1,000,000—viz.: in 1864.

"General Order No. 1." John F- was a soldier. He was a member of the Terth Maine regiment, and orderly sergeant of his company. He was every inch a soldier, brave and true, albeit a little prone to stick to the letter rather than the spirit of the law The articles of war were his study-his vade mecum. In short, he was excessively military-military all through.

At the close of the war, says the New York Ledger, John came home, and was shortly afterward installed into the responsible position of sexton of our church, and he straghitened things out wonderfully. On the very first Sabbath after his taking charge we found posted upon the wall of the church vestibule ar imposing document headed, "General Order No. 1."

Tkere had been trouble in certain quarters resulting from the difficulty which ladies who came to church late found in gaining their seats when gentlemen had got in ahead of them. determined to remody this, so he issued "General Order No. I," which read as follows: "Rules to be observed when a lady wishes to enter a pew in which gentle men are already seated: Let the lady advance one pace beyond the pew-hal -about face-and salute. The pew wil be vacated by the gentlemen by a flank movement. The squad should rise sim-ultaneously when the lady presents herself, and face outward—then deploy into the isle, the head man facing the lady, the others passing to his rear, when, i the line will be perfected up necessary. and down the aisle by a right or left counter-march, as the case may require, the right in front.

"The lady, when the way is clear, will salute again, and advance to her position in the pew, after which the gentlemen will break from the rear, obliquely and resume their places. "Parties performing this evolution have possession of the aisle until it is completed, and none others will interfere. (Signed.)

"John F. F—, Sexton. Things went straight after that.

Had to Be Brave. What I relate are facts which actually officer of the guard.

befell me, says a writer in the Rich-mond Dispatch. The greatest cavalry battle ever fought on the American cor tinent took place at Brandy Station the 9th of June, 1863. At early dawn the federal advance guard crossed the Rappahannock and c harged our outpost with such vigor that they entered our camp at their heels. Most of my regiment (Sixth Virginia) had turned their horses out the evening before and not more than fifty of us were prepared to mount. Our reveille was the crack of the pistor and carbine of the fee. The fifty men were quickly mounted, formed, and ordered to charge. Not a moment was to be lost, as some of the enemy's advance were in our artillery camp.

I was the unfortunate possessor of an untained Bucephalus that no rider on earth could control. I had experienced this on three former occasions. But what could I do, charge or not charge? that was the question. Although I knew full well that my charger would lead the van, of course, I must charge. In our front was a heavily wooded forest of pine shrub and black jack, through which ran a narrow country road. No time was to be lost; therefore there was little ceremony. The usual commands -trot, march, gallop, charge-were omitted, and the gallant Shumate, who mustered the fifty, simply yelled "Charge!" and away we flew down the winding road and through the dark forest, all yelling like Indians. My horse bowed his neck, and place ing his mouth against his breast, I was helpless, and away he fairly flew. What could I do? Pull off the road I could not; stop I could not. Away he went, I looked around, but there was no one in sight. We had left the others far behind. I knew that in a few seconds one solitary cavalryman would be rushing into the midst of the foe. One moment more, and I saw drawn up across my path a double line of federal cavalry. It may be, I thought, they will see my predicament and let me through; it may be that they will not fire, but how could they know that my horse was running away.

They must have thought the devil was coming, for up went at least 100 carbines, a crash, a cloud of smoke, and with one terrible plunge and groan my steed fell in the woods, pierced by several balls, How I escaped God only knows. In a few moments I heard our boys coming down the road. A volley from the federal line, but onward they went, and I, mounting a horse belonging to a lieutenant of company H. who was killed here, joined in. We broke this regiment—the Eighth New York-Lieutenant Owen Alling killing its brave commander, Colonel Davis. Then came the Eighth Illinois, and quicker than some of us came we went.

That night, after the battle was over-for it lasted all day—the boys overwhelmed me with compliments. saw such dash! such courage! Charles O'Malley! Murat! and so on. But what was the laughter and merriment when I innocently observed: "Confound boys, my horse ran away with me.' A Western Hero and His Fall,

During a lifetime of more than ordiniary vicissitudes, writes Joseph T. Goodman in the San Francisco Chronicle, I have come in contact with many brave men, but I never encountered but one man whose bravery was so resplendent that even detraction stood abashed and offered no objection to the absoluteness of his title. He was Jim Thrope. I knew him in the mines of Callornia from 1854 until 1860. Those were rough times, and courage was reckoned as the foremost factor in the estimate of everybody's character. Jim Thorpe had never done anything to earn his transcendent reputation. He was never in a fight; he never challenged the prevalent and ready spirit of aggression; in short, his most distinguishing trait was his uniform and providential absence from every scene of contention. But the manner in which he received the intelligence of an affray gained him his proud eminence. Dispassionately, but impressively, he would tell what one of the combatants should have done at a certain conjuncture, or how the other should have behaved at a specified crisis, and how quickly and neatly he himself would have settled the affair if it had been his luck to be engaged in it. This from a man of herculean build and with a careless repose that somehow suggested the repressed ferocity and unexpected spring of a tiger established Jim Thorpe's status. He was unanimously conceded to be the unaroused terror of the camp, and everybody stood in dread of the direful time when his sleeping wrath should be awakened.

The war of the rebellion came on and the loyal spirit of the north flamed through all the valleys and carons of California. In the particular community to which Jim Thorpe's prowess gave sense of security similar to that experienced by the Trojans in the possession of their palladium it was felt to be the proper thing that he should head a movement for enrolling volunteers, and after much solicitation he consented. A hundred names were speedily enrolled under his leadership, and Captain Jim Thorpe marched with his company of recruits to join the army, and they were immediately incorporated into Colone Connor's Third Regiment of California

Volunteers. The winter encampment at Benicis the weary march over the Sierra and across the deserts of Nevada are no part of this narrative. At length the Third California was in barracks at Camp Douglas, U. T.

The routes to the newly discovered mines in Montana, 500 and more miles away, was beset with deadly peril. Plummer's notorious gang of highwaymen and other bands of cut throats infested it, but worse even than that, the Bannack Indians considered all who traveled it their lawful prey and raided and massacred without stint or pity.

Colonel Connor determined to strike an exterminating blow at the merciless savages. They had gone into winter quarters about 300 warriors strong on the north bank of the Bear river, and in the apparent inaccessibility of the location felt secure from attack. sense of security, however, but doomed them to destruction. Connor waited for the most inclement season of the winter. and in January, 1863, led his forces through a six-days' struggle with snow and cold and mountain fastnesses-dragging his artillery hand over the rugged and pathless wastes-until he finally reached the In-dian encampment. Troughout all the arduous march Jim Thorpe was resolute and indomitable, and his intrepid words and example more than anything else kept up the sorely tried spirits of our troops.

The battle came, and a flerce one it was. Our forces in that bitter January weather had to cross a swollen river filled with anchor ice in face of a mur derous fire, but they crossed it, stormed the heights and left no vestige of the savages to ever again organize a raid on the Montana road. After the conflict-the roll was called. Fifteen dead, fiftythree wounded and seventy-five frozen. Then the honors were distributed There were some recommended for promatton, there was honorable mention of many, but Captain Jim Thorpe was re-primanded for cowardice in having left his post and slunk to the rear at the

One of the simplest and most effective cures for that often serious affliction to a traveler, a cinder in the eye, is that of a common flaxseed. One or two of these may be placed in the eye without injury; they shortly begin to swell and exud glutinous substance that covers the ball of the eye, enveloping any foreign substance that may be in it; then seed and irritant may be washed out. A number of astronomers agreed to make observations for two years, and the result has just been made public. Latitudes do change. Berlin, for example, was fifty feet nearer the north pole in September than it was in March. This change is not, of course, a shifting of any one point on the earth's surface.
