Considerable complaint was indulged in by those who were compelled to be about town by the darkness of the streets last evening. Until 10:15 p. m. the streets did not give forth a ray. Inquiry at the power house developed the fact that they were waiting for orders from the police headquarters and that the orders were not forthcoming because the almanac said there was a moon. Pedestrians demand that the police break away from the Philadelphia schedule when the moon fails to make its appearance.

WAR ON DIVES.

Mayor Lawrence has Two Disreputable Resorts Closed by the Police.
The "Court" saloon, kept by Frank Carroll on Lower Broadway and the Opera House saloon, run by Mike Kildare, were closed yesterday under an order direct from Mayor Lawrence.

Both were dives of the most disreputable kind, and the complaints that have come to the ears of the public every few days by reason of the frequent robberies and other criminal transactions that took place there have led many to expect just such a move on the part of the mayor.

Before the mayor's decision such an occurrence as that of Monday morning to close the mayor the necessary public sentiment to back him, and yesterday the order was given.

Before the mayor's decision such an occurrence as that of Monday morning to close the mayor the necessary public sentiment to back him, and yesterday the order was given.

A reporter found Mayor Lawrence leaning wearily against the door of his private office, trying to recover from the effects of a conversation he had with Carroll's attorney, so that he might receive another delegation of the saloonkeepers' friends.

"You would be surprised," said he, "if I were to tell you the names of some of the men who have been to me since I issued my order and asked me to reconsider. Many of them are my personal friends, and I hate to refuse them any reasonable request. But there is no use talking, those places have been smelling to heaven for months past, and I cannot disregard the requests of the men who have been coming to me continually, especially since the shooting scrape, and asking me why I did not take some steps to prevent such disreputable joints from running. Neither Kildare nor Carroll shall ever run a saloon again in this town while I am able to prevent it."

As soon as Kildare of the Opera House saloon was notified of the mayor's order by Chief Scanlon he pulled a roll of bills and handing $300 in two bills to his partner, Al Noack, with a great flourish, he told him to go and hire a party of five men to begin action to close up every saloon in Council Bluffs. Whether this is the intention of the two men or they are simply running a bluff cannot be told with any certainty, but there is just enough probability of their really requiring a crusade to make the poor afflicted saloonkeepers feel a little uneasy.

NEWS FROM COUNCIL BLUFFS

FEW NEW FACTS WERE BROUGHT OUT

Several Witnesses Examined but Very Little Light Gained—Suspicion Strong Against Maher—Will Carry the Inquiry to the End.

The taking of evidence by the coroner's jury over the remains of Jack Wade, the dead back driver, was resumed yesterday morning.

James Connor, who works for John C. Lee and rooms in Lee's establishment across the street from the scene of the shooting, was the first witness. He stated that he happened to be awake just before the shooting and heard someone say, "Jack, you've been following me now for the last two years; what have you got to say for yourself?" and immediately two shots were fired. Whose voice uttered the speech he could not say.

C. Peterson was passing the place of the shooting and heard loud talk. He saw the shots fired, two from one gun and one from another, at the time when the men were about the width of the sidewalk from one another. Henry Johnson, alias Stewart, C. H. Leuch, Otto Pfeiffer and Dr. J. C. Waterman were examined, but nothing new in the way of information was obtained from them.

Tom Callaghan told his story substantially as it was told in The Bee. During the quarrel between Wade on one side and Maher and Johnson on the other, the question of back fire, both the latter started toward him—Callaghan—and after receiving a blow upon the head from Maher he started off up the street on the run. He looked back, however, and saw the two men following Wade, who backed off with his revolver pointed at them and told them to stay back or he would fire.

The gun Wade had, Callaghan said, belonged to a girl who lived at 119 Pierce street. She had exhibited it in Wade's presence shortly before the shooting and said she intended to shoot her lover with it. Wade got the gun away from her and kept it.

A HOMELIKE RETREAT.

The Model Establishment of the International Cure Association.

In the beautiful 4-story stone and brick building, No. 520 1st avenue, just west of the Grand hotel, the International Cure Association has established a most attractive home for patients desiring treatment for the drug disease.

For convenience, beauty and comfort a better selection could not have been made. Located in the very center of the city, in touch of its business houses, hotels and boarding houses, it possesses all the summer attractions of a pleasure resort, for it faces upon the beautiful Bayview park, with its grand trees and sparkling fountains. Arrangements are being made to provide patients also with ample opportunities for outdoor recreation, such as lawn tennis, croquet, quoits, etc. With private grounds in the rear and the public park in front, those who frequent the institution may feel as retired or as active a life as may best please the individual.

Entering the almost palatial appearing building, one finds the interior attractive and commodious. The reception room impresses one with the homelikeness of the place. Through the hall, one is led to the treatment rooms, which are well lighted and airy. A large fire place, with artistic mantel, suggests, in contrast, the requisite cheerfulness in the chilly evening time. Leading from the reception room is the parlor for the use of the physicians, and their room for examinations, consultation and treatment, together with a little dispensary, closed at one side. Further along the hallway are bathrooms and toilet rooms, and private rooms for the use of patients in special cases, where constant care and continued attendance is required. Then there are the club rooms proper, which are open to the use of all. Games are here provided, and anything needed to make the time pass pleasantly. The tables in the reading room are strewn with the latest and best literature.

Throughout the establishment there is an air of real comfort and cleanliness, and the treatment is of the most completely equipped institutions in the west.

The association is under the control of such well known citizens as W. J. Davenport of the C. & B. & C. City Market, Templeton, T. J. Davenport, City Auditor and Colonel Tully, Mr. J. E. Harkness is the business director and Dr. T. J. Tregnor the medical director.

Fort Dodge, Ia., May 31.—[Special Telegram to The Bee.]—Rev. J. N.
