

DEATH DISCLOSED DISGRACE

George Williams of Boone Had Deserted His Wife and Babies.

ROMANCE OF A PENSION APPLICATION

A Family Broken up by a Father Reunited After His Death—How Pretty Maud Richmond Fought Her Long Lost Brother.

Behind the scenes in Standard's con- tention, near Broadway, and the woman whose maiden name shall not be mentioned. The latter was the belle of the neighborhood. George was the pride of the village. He was young, handsome, educated, and, above all, he had been a soldier and had died at Gettysburg.

In the course of seven years three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams. They were named Maud, Frank and May. At the time mentioned the father was teaching school in Dixon. On the fourth of July, 1877, he took Frank, then about 5 years of age, to visit a brother living some miles distant. That was the last that was seen or heard of father or son in the neighborhood. The little school was without a teacher. The Williams home was without a father and a son.

It was thought for a time that the two had been drowned. It was noticeable, however, that a girl named Maudie Waring had also disappeared. Maudie was a rosy cheeked girl with sunny tresses and ripe, red lips, who had frequently won the admiration of the young men of the town.

But she favored none of them. She was attending Mrs. Williams' school and her parents thought her young "to go with Maudie." But her parents and her friends were deceived.

She had not been absent long before it was known conclusively that she had eloped with her school teacher. A father and mother were broken hearted over the disgrace brought upon them, and were soon buried in the cemetery over the hill. A wife and mother in another home grieved over her desertion and the loss of a son who had been rarely snatched from her by her unworthy spouse.

Three years after the disappearance of the mother, weary of struggling against the world, secured a divorce on the ground of desertion. She then married a physician named Dr. Lowden. There were no children for her, however, in the married state, and one year after entering it the second time, she died.

Taken to California. Shortly after Mrs. Williams' second marriage, the daughter was taken to Shingle Springs, Cal., by her grandmother, Mrs. Homer Johnston. Her mother and her husband, Maud lived with her indulgent grandparents for some time when her grandmother returned to the old home in Dixon, O., to gain possession of her inheritance and remained with her mother up to the death of the latter.

After her mother then took May to California also. The girls, Maud and May lived for a time with their grandparents and then at Sacramento with an aunt named Mrs. Richmond. Williams, who had never been heard of since her disappearance. Out of regard for the kindness of the former lady both of the girls have assumed and for many years have been known by her name.

Time Brings Its Changes. The little orphaned girls grew into beautiful and lovable women. But where had the father gone? What had become of Frank? No one knew, and the girls were unable to trace the course or locate the guilty and unfeeling husband and father. At length, however, a ray of light fell upon the mystery in which the disappearance had been enveloped.

A month ago a resident of Dixon, O., who had known ever since he had lived there for nearly a century, received a letter from a woman signing herself "Mrs. Maudie Williams." The woman wrote that her husband had died, and that she had seven children, one of the latter being a boy, the son of her husband by a former marriage. She then admitted that she was Maudie Waring, and that when attending Mrs. Williams' school at Dixon, she had run away in a mad moment with her teacher, the latter, she stated, had forbidden her to write to anybody back home or to tell anybody the circumstances concerning their elopement. This, she said, was the first letter she had written on the subject, as also the first she had sent back to her old home. She claimed she was the first to have run away, and she was sorry for the wrong she had done to some, and she had experienced sufficient misery to atone for the pain she had given others.

She Wanted a Pension. The letter was circulated through town. It became the subject of gossip for many an hour. It never would have been written and not the runaway husband, but the girl, Boone county, Neb. He had been a soldier. The widow had been told that if she could get a certain paper signed by a certain official to a certain set of facts, she would be able to get a pension of $22 a month for her children.

After the sensation caused by the receipt of this letter had subsided it was forwarded to Oakland and perused by the relatives of the Williams girls and the girls themselves. To Miss Maud it suggested the query, "What has become of Frank?" She immediately addressed a letter to him at the postoffice and directed to her care. It was full of a sister's joy over the prospect of discovering a brother.

The letter was answered. Frank lived in the person of a big, brawny, handsome, dapper looking young man. He had survived the grasshoppers and other hardships incident to a farmer's life in Nebraska, and, as proof of the fact, sent a cabinet photograph of himself, which could not be doubted.

The letter was long and interesting. The young man said that he had no recollection of his mother or sisters or former home. When he awoke to consciousness as a boy of 7 years his father was living in a sod house on an open prairie, near the Nebraska Nebraska prairie. They had struggled against every misfortune incidental to early settlement, and in the most difficult manner had acquired a farm and a reputation and were in the enjoyment of good health and the prosperity which always attend the thrifty farmer.

His father too had risen to distinction in the neighborhood, but nobody, not even the son himself, knew that the father had been a big game hunter, and that he had driven her to the grave and then left two children to starve or be taken care of by the charity of the world.

Little Miss Maudie Richmond cried as she read the letter, so straightforward and so manly, and longed to be clasped in the strong brotherly arms of the writer. There were tears of sorrow, but they were not unmingled with those of joy, because from out of the impenetrable darkness and mystery her family had been rescued and there would be no more separation.

Frank is going out to Oakland in a few weeks. That is why little Miss Maudie's sweetness and happiness are more pronounced than ever as she dispenses her words.

Architect's Building's Comp. In the light between the mayor and the city hall architect, the latter has decidedly the advantage, but how long he will hold it no one will say.

Some time Sunday a large wooden sign calling attention to the fact that Charles F. Reinhardt was the architect of the building was securely bolted to the iron columns above the first landing. There it stays and the mayor is not saying a word as to whether or not it will remain.

What Stronger Proof. In need of the most efficient of all remedies than the hundreds of letters can furnish coming in telling of marvelous cures it has effected after all other remedies had failed. Truly, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses peculiar curative power unknown to other medicines. Hood's pills cure constipation by restoring the peristaltic action of the alimentary canal. They are the best family cathartic.

THEY FAVOR A COMPROMISE

Proposition of Burlington Officials to Chairman Caldwell.

TO CONTROL WESTERN FREIGHT RATES

Affairs of the Association to Be Arranged in a Manner Satisfactory to All Interested Parties—Other Railroad News.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 8.—The Burlington officials have made some material changes in their proposed amendments to the Western Freight association agreement since they were first presented. One of their propositions was to elect for a term of one year five vice presidents and general managers to constitute an executive committee for the adjudication of differences between members.

This provision has been withdrawn and the following inserted in its place: At each regular meeting of the association shall consider and vote upon all changes in rates proposed, of which due notice has been given and all parties shall be expressed. In case the member presenting the subject cannot abide by the vote of the association, then the subject shall be referred to the chairman of the association and he shall request four representatives of lines in the association to act with him in adjudicating the differences. All subjects so referred to the chairman must be acted upon and interested parties notified of the recommendations within five days after such reference.

May Take an Appeal. The recommendations of a majority of this special committee shall be binding upon all, unless the parties presenting the subject shall give the association or chairman definite written notice that in thirty days thereafter they will make modifications, notwithstanding the fact that the chairman and the recommendations of the special committee. Such written notice must be filed with the chairman within five days after receipt of the recommendations of the special committee, and of the special committee, and if in the judgment of such two-thirds the rates so adopted, affect seriously the rates upon other roads, then the association may, by a two-thirds vote, put in effect corresponding rates on such other traffic, to take effect the same day. By unanimous consent any rate, rule or regulation relating to freight traffic may be modified at any meeting of the association with previous notice. The other amendments will go before the meeting as they were originally drawn up.

Eastbound Shipments. Again the tonnage statement shows a falling off in eastbound shipments last week. The total by all roads was 53,745 tons, against 53,872 for the preceding week, a decrease of 1,127 tons. In the same proportion amounted during the week to 89,183 tons, against 91,407 for the preceding week, a decrease of 2,224 tons.

Arbitrators Chosen. F. C. Donald and Oscar G. Murray, selected to arbitrate differences between the Atchafalpa road and Chairman Caldwell of the Western Passenger association, have chosen the third arbitrator, S. H. Holden, attorney of the Big Four road, of Cleveland.

The question to be decided by these gentlemen is whether under the agreement of the Western Passenger association arbitration should be named in five days from the time when the appeal is taken, as the chair man's list is entitled to five days after the appeal is filed.

Diarrhea a Kentucky. "There has been a continued tendency to bowel disease here this season," says G. W. Shivel, druggist, Wickliffe, Ky., "and an unusual demand for Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhea Remedy. I have sold four bottles of it this morning. Some remarkable cures have been effected by it and in all cases it has proved successful." For sale by druggists.

Very True. The demand for Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhea Remedy is steadily growing, from the fact that all who give it are pleased with the results and recommend it to their neighbors. We feel sure that the remedy cannot be overpriced, and to highly. Wazley & Smead, druggists, Newton, Ia.

Plattdeutschers' Picnic. The members of the Omaha Plattdeutschers' Verein, or at least some 500 of them, went out to Ruson's park Sunday afternoon, where they had a most delightful time. The whole went out in two sections, the first leaving the Webster street depot at 2:30 and the second a couple of hours later. At the park the customary picnic was one of the features of the day. Then there were the athletic sports, consisting of running, jumping, vaulting, etc., in which the most vigorous and large platform had been erected where the merry dancers enjoyed themselves to their hearts' content.

They're hard to digest. Not only the nut that our amiable Italian friend doses out as the "dagos" bye at a dime a cup—with a couple of fingers in it—the ancient minstrel joke with whiskers on it—the average fish story and the campaign lie are chestnuts; but there's such a thing as chestnuts accumulating in a store—so we've heard.
