The Bearded and Beardless. If a youth began to shave at the age of 17 years and continued to do so until he was 70 he would, assuming that his hair maintained the average rate of growth, have removed a length of nine rards. But had the hair been allowed to grow the result would have been different to what might be inferred. The growth from the roots would have continued, but on reaching a length of between eighteen and twenty-four inches, the hair would have become brittle, have split and broken. The greatest length of beard usual in our climate seldom exceeds two feet. In hot climates, owing to the moist state of the skin, the hair grows much more rapidly and profusely than in cold or temperate climates. In the east flowing beards from three to four feet in length are not unusual. German Parliament Building. The gigantic future home of the Reichstag is still but a forest of scaffold poles, but some idea may be obtained of the appearance it is likely to present when it is inaugurated two years hence. The main entrances are four in number, one at each side, each approached by broad flights of steps, and each differing from the other. The actual chamber is under a cupola, something like that of the Pantheon, surmounted by the imperial crown, which is in the exact center of the whole mass of buildings lobby, which is to be adorned with richly ornamented columns, stretches right across the building from the Spree to the Thiergarten, its length of about 100 meters being broken in the center by an octagonal hall and on to it open most of the offices, the private rooms of ministers, the library and the dining room. A similar arrangement is to be made on the floor above and the floor below the level of the entrances. At each corner of the building is a sort of loggia, richly ornamented. Confounded by Experts. The defense showed that in order to get a twentieth part of a grain of the poison into one's system it would be necessary to drink lemonade every day for six months at the rate of 220 bottles a day. The experts added gravely that before the twentieth part of a grain could be taken in that manner the experimenter would die of dyspepsia. OF INTEREST TO THE FARMER, Wherever it has been grown alfalfa has proven itself by far the most valuable grass known to our whole agriculture. It has more than solved the prob lem of how to keep a cow to the acre, because It has well kept five of them to the acre for a period of eight months. In view of its extraordinary and proven productiveness there should be further and more definite experiments made to discover if it is not adaptable to regions where it is not now grown.

One great point of advantage to farmers in the cultivation of the sugar beet is that they have, in advance of the planting of the crop, an absolute guarantee of market and price. This re-moves many of the elements of uncertainty which surround the general operations of the farm. If the cultivation of the beet is well understood the grower may reckon with considerable certainty upon the cash value of the crop from a given number of acres. About the only taknown quantity for which he must make allowance will be the state of the weather, and where irrigation is practiced, as it will be in many beet-growing districts, this matter also will be pretty well under control of the farmer.

For the farmer who has other interests beside the raising of horses, but yet who desires to add this as a side line to his other occupations, we believe it is desirable to have the colt foaled in the fall rather than in the spring. He is then weaped in the spring, when fresh grass is ready for him to feed upon. Kept in the stable through the winter, he can be trained and handled as he should be from the very first. The colt that comes in the spring, when the busy season is just commencing, does not have excessive care lavished upon him, and by the time fall comes and his owner has the opportunity to handle him he has grown so large as to make the beginning a matter of difficulty.

We have known some farmers who were well posted upon the different qualities of artificial manures, yet who seemed to think that all farm manures were alike, without regard to how they were produced or handled; but there is in fact just as much variation in them as in commercial fertilizers. The quality depends primarily upon the feeding stuffs from which they are produced, then upon the material used for bedding and absorbing, then upon the amount of the liquids that are procured, and, finally upon the care that is exercised to avoid waste. By sheltering to avoid loss by washing out and by turning frequently to avoid the escape of the volatile elements, its entire original value may be conveyed to the soil. Observation will show, however, that few farmers manage so as to get this full value, even though they may be buying commercial manures to make good the de-

One objection urged against winter dairying is that it is so much trouble to raise the calves when they can not be turned out on pasture. This difficulty is not a serious one if you have a good, warm barn, clover hay and ensilage. Without these you should not attempt to run a winter dairy. A calf that is dropped in the fall, started on whole milk, gradually dropped to skim milk with a little linseed meal, then to wheat middlings, clover and ensilage, can be ready to put out on the pasture in the spring in good shape. If it has been fed liberally and judiciously at a year old it will be but little, if any, behind calves of the same age dropped in the spring, and it will have cost less than the year old calf that is pastured its first half year and barnfed the second. A thrifty calf will begin to pick at hay at six weeks of age, and at three months will eat and digest a considerable quantity there should be a definite object, which should always be kept in view and worked toward steadily. Before you breed know what you want to produce, and mate your animals distinctly for that. If you wish to form a dairy herd to procure a large yield of milk for a cheese factory or for sale by the quart or gallon, use a pure bred Holstein-Frislan or Ayrshire bull of good milking family. If you use native cows to start with, and always employ pure bred bull of the breed with which ou begin, you will soon begin to see a direct result in the improvement of your herd. If you are after butter or especially rich milk, use Jersey or Guernsey bulls, and stick to them. not mix up your breeding. Apply the same rule in breeding your horses, hogs and sheep. Find out first what you want, and then strive persistently to attain it. Every time you vary from the direct line, or permit the use of a grade sire, you are taking a step backward.

A matter of principal importance which will engage the attention of the farmers through a large portion of the country now within a few weeks will be the preparation of the ground for the seeding of wheat. Although it is some time before the crop will be put in, it is not too early to give serious thought to how it shall be done. Upon the manner in which the seed bed is made depends very largely the success or failure of the crop. Our present low average of wheat production is due to the fact that we are oo careless in this initial step. Instead of getting the average crop of twelve bushels to the nere, we now have many farmers who are getting regularly close to thirty bushels, and we know personally of one who has increased his crop from below this average by regular step, until last year he harvested fortytwo bushels of wheat to the acre. That this gain has been made by improving the seed bed is evident, because ery little can be done for the crop after it is started. The most that we can do in the way of cuitivation is to harrow the ground lightly once or twice as long as we sow in such close drills as we do now. Our best wheat growers now plow their land as long as possible before the time to put in the seed-four, six or even eight weeks ahead, it it can be done. Then, by successive deep harrowing and rolling, the land is finely pulverized for some inches below the surface, and compacted. This gives a fine, firm bed for the reception of the seed, while the soil below is sufficiently loose to permit the penetration of the roots. Such a bed will retain moisture well, and will enable the plants to become set so firmly that they will not easily be thrown out of the ground by freezing and thawing. If to such preparation is added the careful selection of seed and the thorough enriching of the ground by such means as may seem best and most economical, the resultant crop will be such as to afford a profit oven in the most depressed condition of agriculture.

Fine manure is more valuable than coarse, because it becomes more readily incorporated with the soil. Corn fodder that is fed whole and long straw used for bedding make macure that is coarse and difficult to handle. By running all such material through a cutting box its value will be enhanced and much labor saved in the long run.

long straw, and will rot sooner, and so be more quickly available for manure,

Live Stock. If the calf is never permitted to run with the cow at all much less trouble will be experienced in teaching it to drink. Feed all new milk at the start and feed often-four times a day at least -and then never let it overload its stomach. After a week change to warm skim milk, with the addition of a little cooked oil meal or sifted out meal, Calves that are raised by hand are almost always better off if kept in a clean and comfortable stall than when turned out of doors. After a month old put hay within their reach and they will soon learn to nibble By proper care and management the calf that is raised by hand will develop just as rapidly as if it had run with the cow, and it is very certain that it will cost much less. Generally speaking, the profit in keeping an animal decreases or wholly disppe ars shortly after the prime of life is assed. If kept long after this point is eached the profit that has accrued from eeding through the earlier stages may be easily lost. Farmers are not usually much given to sentiment in this matter, and do not retain animals after the period of profitable use is passed from any especial affection, but simply they do not recognize the fact that they are on the down grade. Go into the barns and fields of men who are theroughly successful stockraisers and you will find many young animals, very rarely any that are much past their prime. On the other hand, look over the stock of men who think that live stock does not pay, and you will often see the reason plainly written in the too great age to which the animals are kept.

The best time to sell an old or aging animal is direct from good pasture. If you cannot get it in good shape for market on grass, you cannot do so with profit in any other way. To put it up and feed grain would cost you more than you would gain, and very often an animal can be made moderately fat on grass that could hardly be fed up at all on grain and hay, because of the im-paired condition of both its teeth and digestive apparatus. Save your winter feed and winter care for young and thrifty stock that can pay you a good re-turn, even if some of the old stand-bys have to be sold for canners' stock in the fall for a little less than you think it is really worth. Keep nothing on hand from now until next April that does not show some good earning power. If you think you must feed grain to old animals in order to fit them for market, it would be well to have it coarse ground, or else cooked so that it may be more easily masticated.

Fall pigs, in order to be carried through the winter with much profit, should be littered by the 1st of October. Then there is a chance to get them well started before they are put into winter quarters and on grain rations. These early fall pigs, if well fed, may be made ready for sale at anywhere from five months to ten months old. Use as succulent food as possible while they are young. Bran slop and cooked potatoes make a good ration. The slop should be fed sweet, or nearly so. There is no harm in a little fermentation, but sourslop should be carefully avoided. The safest way is to mix it as fed, for in warm weather a little neglect will make it as sour as vinegar. Tobacco Culture in Nebraska,

To investigate the tobacco fields of Schuyler Messrs. Hy A. Koenig, Ad Blunck and Herm Abraham the other day went to Schuyler, says the Grand Island Independent and Mr. Abraham the tobacco and cigar manufacturer of Grand Island, has kindly furnished us the following report:

In 1890 the culture of tobacco was commenced at Schuyler and has just son without meeting more obstacles (hail, wind storms, drouth or tobacco worms) than in any other country. Thirty acres in all were raised. The first planting was done about the niddle of June and the last about July 1, the first cutting about August 15 and the last about September 8, taking in all about sixty days. This demonstrates that tobacco ripens much earlier in this climate than in any other cigar leaf growing districts, and that no injury from frost is to be feared. The variety of seed used this season was of a Connecticut Havana, which seems better adapted to this country than any other

The crop of this year is far above that of any previous year. The first year demonstrated only that a good quality of tobacco could be raised in the Platte valley, the second that tobacco could be raised of sufficient commercial value to induce growing it, and this year proves that probably tobacco can be raised here which rivals any raised in Con-can compare tobacco from other districts, when at this stage, and must conclude there is none finer. Messrs. Wells and Nieman have built an improved tobacco shed, with all the modern appliances, and we examined their earliest cutting, which was housed about August 16. The leaf is all coloring fine and showing delicate glossy colors, the veins are as fine as threads, and we have not discovered anything which would indicate white veins. If this tobacco will turn out as well as it has so far developed, the Platte valley will gain a reputation. To illustrate the value of last year's crop, it is to be mentioned that Messrs. Wells and Nieman are offered in the average 15 cents per pound, the yield being estimated at 1,500 pounds per acre, which means $225 per acre. And they have twelve acres of this crop. Mr. Kolm, who has charge of this farm, says it has cost them about $70 per acre. Tempting us this may look we would not advise any farmer to try raising tobacco without having learned the business thoroughly. An experiment without the management of a skilled overseer of long experience would result in loss and discouragement. Improved sheds must also be crected.

But by careful management Nebraska can be made a tobacco growing state. Honor is due to Messrs. Wells & Nieman for enterprise and perseverance without bounds shown by them, and our state will have to thank them for the starting of a great agricultural industry, which will outshine all the other crops that have made Nebraska famous.
