MINOR MENTION.

N. Y. Plumbing Co.

Ocune Bluffs Lumber Co., Coal.

A special meeting of the city council will be held this evening.

H. A. Baird discovered the comet last evening and had it on exhibition at the corner of Broadway and Scott street.

The funeral of Mrs. Charles Siegel will occur this morning at 8:30 o'clock from the family residence, 1613 Second avenue.

Will buy for cash, furniture, household goods, carpets, for a three or four-room house. Address S 25, BEE, Council Bluffs.

A meeting of the First Congregational church will be held in the church Monday evening at 7:30 o'clock. A full attendance is requested.

E. T. Waterman, it is stated, is organizing a stock company for the purpose of carrying on the manufacture of carriages and vehicles of all descriptions on a large scale.

Charles E. Thompson, who died on the Northwestern train between Council Bluffs and Missouri Valley last week, was buried yesterday afternoon from Eaton's undertaking rooms under the auspices of the local branch of the Typographical union.

Mrs. F. H. Evans entertained a party of friends Thursday afternoon in honor of Miss Uhl of Cleveland, O., who is visiting Mrs. E. W. Hart. Those present were Mrs. F. P. Wright, Mrs. W. W. Sherman, Mrs. E. W. Hart, Mrs. W. F. Sapp, Miss Uhl, Miss Wright, Miss Morrow.

The funeral of Abe Snyder occurred yesterday afternoon from the Broadway Methodist church, Rev. H. P. Dudley officiating. There was a large attendance, the members of Council Bluffs lodge, No. 49, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, being present in a body and taking charge of the services at the grave.

Mrs. William Madden, who lives alone on Logan street, had a narrow escape from suffocation Saturday night. When she retired she wrapped up a hot flatiron in a cloth and put it inside the bed to keep her warm. About 2 o'clock she was awakened by a stifling sensation. Upon making an investigation she found that the flatiron had been so hot that it set fire to the bedclothing and nearly all of it had been burned, the smoke filling the room in a dense cloud.

The convenience of a jar of Cudahy's Rex Brand Extract of Beef is never better appreciated than when some grocer's "just out."

Silk Market Affected.

Any one not acquainted with the silk market would naturally think that silks of all kinds are advancing rapidly in price.

Such is the case with raw material, and must certainly affect the price on all silk goods. As usual, we're looking after the markets, and bought in time to save the 25 per cent advance on all kinds of silks. We intend giving our patrons the advantage of this purchase, and place on sale for your inspection over 2,760 pieces of all silk ribbons at less than manufacturer's price today in gros grain, satins, satin edge and moire, all widths, all colors and beautiful range of light shades for fancy work.

Note following prices:

No. 1 ribbons from 10c to 19c a piece.

All silk moire ribbon, piquot edge, No. 5 at 6c, No. 7 at 8c, No. 9 at 10c, No. 12 at 12½c.

One of the best values we offer out of our large purchase is the bargains we show in satin ribbons, in pure silk, heavyweight goods. No. 5 at 7c, No. 7 at 9c, No. 9 at 12½c, No. 12 at 15c, No. 16 at 18c, No. 22 at 22c.

In addition to the two above lines we have a full range of shades and colors in gros grain with satin edge at same prices.

PERSONAL PARAGRAPHS.

Miss Morrow of Iowa City is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Wright on Seventh street.

Mrs. Guitar of Columbia, Mo., and Mrs. Kuechle of St. Joseph are the guests of Mrs. Waddell.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Thornton of Kearney, Neb., are guests of Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Pusey, at their home east of the city.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Stewart have returned from Davenport, where they went to visit their daughter, Miss Eleanor, who is attending St. Catherine's academy.

Charles Arnd has gone to Pierre, S. D., to be married to a young lady of that place. He and his bride will be at home to friends in this city after December 6.

J. H. E. Clark has been compelled to give up the management of the Carbon Coal company for the present and will go south in search of health. He will probably remain all winter.

No use to deny the fact that Salvation Oil is fast taking the place of all other liniments.

Weather Reports.

The indications are for western Iowa colder weather. This statement is verified by the rush of patrons at the Boston Store underwear department in the past week.

Since the early trade we have had our stock replenished with everything necessary to complete an underwear department.

We have a few broken lines that we are closing out and call your attention to the following bargains on our counter:

Lost Two Fingers.

Clark Strong, fireman at the electric motor power house, took his gun and went out to Big Lake yesterday afternoon to hold a Sabbath communion with nature and shoot rabbits on the side. He was walking through a thick growth of underbrush, and raised his left hand to put a straggling grape vine out of his way. Just at that moment his gun, which he was carrying in his right hand, went off and he got the whole charge in his left hand, which was literally peppered with the little balls of lead. He went to his home, 2166 avenue G, and called Drs. Pinney and Green, who found it necessary to amputate the first two fingers of his hand at the knuckle joint.

Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup is the best of all remedies for children teething. 25 cents a bottle.

Best day board in the city, $3.50 per week at the Scott house.

NEWS FROM COUNCIL BLUFFS

Narrow Escape of a Silver City School Teacher From Instant Death.

J. C. HIGGINS' WAY OF STOPPING A TRAIN

In Attempting to Board a Moving Train He is Almost Thrown Beneath Its Wheels and Receives Very Serious Injuries.

J. C. Higgins, a school teacher from Silver City, narrowly missed transferring his residence to the golden city yesterday afternoon, and it is due only to his downright, bullheaded luck that he will be able in the future to apply the shingle to the anatomy of his pupils with his wonted vigor. He had been spending the day in Council Bluffs and arrived at the transfer depot just in time to see the Wabash passenger train start out. He gave chase and caught the last car before it had passed the end of the platform. He grasped the handrail and was pulling himself on to the platform of the car when he missed his grip and fell down between the two platforms, landing on the ground beside the rails. Fortunately it was the rear platform of the rear car, and he escaped being run over, but in finding solid ground he passed through a hole not over six inches wide, and was severely squeezed. He was picked up half senseless and gasping for breath, and was put on board the train, which had been signalled to stop. An investigation showed that he had sustained a fracture of the breast bone, but it could not be told whether he had received any internal injuries that might make his case serious, until a more careful examination was made. He was taken to Silver City.

Thousands sink into an early grave for want of a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. This great remedy would have saved them.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

At the Farnam street theater tonight Gus Thomas, in the successful comedy drama, "The Burglar."

Margaret Mather is to be the star at Boyd's new theater next Thursday, Friday and Saturday. This is to be her farewell visit to Omaha. Thursday she will present John Tobin's pleasant and sparkling comedy, "The Honeymoon." This same bill will be repeated Saturday afternoon. On the second night, Friday, she is to give Bulwer Lytton's graceful, strong romance, "The Lady of Lyons." The last night, "Nance Oldfield" and the new tragedy, "The Egyptian," in both of which Miss Mather appears.

At the Bijou theater, Capitol avenue, "Hazel Kirke," by the Lacy Dramatic company. Also vaudeville specialties.

Piles of people have piles, but DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve will cure them.

GRAND ARMY DEPARTMENT.

Familiar Descriptive Titles Conferred on Army Generals.

The nomenclature of the army was particularly rich in descriptive titles, and a study of the men upon whom these names were bestowed will discover the fact that very few of them were ill advised or misplaced, says the Washington Star.

General Ulysses Simpson Grant was at first called "Old United States," from the initials of his name. After the little episode at Fort Donelson, when he issued the edict which stamped him as equal to the emergency, his men enthusiastically declared that those initials stood for "Unconditional Surrender."

In fact those initials caused him not a little perturbation of mind, and in the end he actually had to abandon his baptismal name to save the dignity of West Point, which unwittingly gave him a name that didn't belong to him; but since it was "writ down" the red tape complications involved in restoring his right name presented formidable obstacles which he hesitated to tackle. Many of his men called him "Old Three Stars," that indicating his rank as lieutenant general. Later, when fighting the battle with the conqueror who soon or late subdues all flesh, he became known the world over as the "Silent Sufferer."

General William T. Sherman was familiarly called "Uncle Billy" by his men and also "Old Tecumseh."

General George B. McClellan, who was a prime favorite with his men, became endeared to them as "Little Mac."

General George C. Meade wore glasses and was speedily dubbed "Four-Eyed George" from that and from the fact that he was keen and quick and very little escaped his observation. The title was one of which he was proud, for he knew it was not designed to cut two ways.

General Ambrose E. Burnside, who relieved McClellan as commander of the Army of the Potomac, was at first colonel of the First Rhode Island, but when he came to the dignity of general he was titled "Rhody." Incidentally it may be stated that General Burnside also gave name to the particular cut of "side burns" so much in vogue a few years since. "The general with his whiskers" was considered a very handsome figure.

General Joseph E. Hooker got the soubriquet "Fighting Joe," which he hated heartily, and the man who was spoiling for a "scrap" could earn it easily by alluding to the doughty general's title in his presence.

The McCook family was well represented in the war of the rebellion, and the members were generally "bunched" as the "fighting McCooks." General Alexander McCook had as one of his staff officers Adjutant General Dan McCook of Illinois. Other members of the family were Captain Edwin McCook, who belonged to Logan's regiment; Lieutenant Edward McCook, who was in the regular army; Major Anson G. McCook of the Second Ohio, Captain Henry McCook of Illinois and Sheldon McCook, lieutenant in the navy. They bore themselves bravely and won the title "fighting McCooks" where the battle raged fiercest.

General John Pope was called "Skullduggery John." When he first took command of the Army of Virginia he found everything in confusion, which he set to work to straighten out. Consequently when asked where his headquarters were he replied "in the saddle." His men said that headquarters were "in the saddle on the move," and their location liable to be in dangerous proximity to the enemy's fire during an engagement.

General Irvin McDowell was derisively denominated "pope" by his irreverent men, because, as they said, he issued more "bulls" than the pope of Rome. They said of the two generals that Pope's "headquarters" were in the saddle and McDowell's "head" in a basket, because the latter general was so extremely cautious.

Franz Sigel, the jolly German general, was familiarly known as "Dutchy."

General Winfield Hancock was known as "Hancock the Superb," a name given him by General Meade after the magnificent manner in which he repulsed Longstreet at Gettysburg.

General Andrew A. Humphrey, who was a distinguished engineer, was styled "Old Mathematics."

General S. W. Crawford was called "Old Physics," because in the beginning of his military career he was a surgeon. He was with Major Anderson during the bombardment of Fort Sumter, and saved the life of Roger A. Pryor of Virginia, who while under a flag of truce inside the fort unceremoniously picked up a glass of liquid from a table and drank it for a "whisky straight." It proved to be iodide of potassium, but "Old Physics" pumped him out and saved his life.

General John A. Logan had several titles. One was "Black Jack," because of his tawny complexion and long black hair. He was also called "Old War Eagle" and the "Black Eagle of Illinois."

General Philip Sheridan, whose stature was far from commensurate with his ability and brain, was greatly beloved by his men and was called by them "Little Phil."

General Albert Sykes was "Syksey" among his men.

General Henry W. Halleck was derisively nicknamed "Old Brains."

General William S. Rosecrans was speedily dubbed "Rosy."

General Lew Wallace was called "Lewisa." Not that his men deemed him effeminate, but because they wanted some endearing term for a general whom they were devotedly attached to, and that was the first that suggested itself.

General Philip Kearney left an arm in Mexico and was known among his men as "One-Armed Phil."

General Benjamin F. Butler because of his peculiar drooping eyelids was called "Old Cock-Eye."

General Judson C. Kilpatrick was known as "Kill," simply as an abbreviation of his last name.

Dashing General George Custer because of his long yellow curls was known as "Ringlets."

General George H. Thomas was familiarly known among his men as "Pap Thomas." After the battle of Chickamauga he was given as a mark of distinguished honor the title "Rock of Chickamauga."

Hanging a Spy.

"Halt! Who goes there?"

It is 11 o'clock on a winter's night, writes M. Quad in the New York Sun. A cavalryman on picket hears a suspicious sound in the leafless bushes on his right. He has hardly spoken when the echo comes back to him from the post below:

"Halt! Who goes there?"

The figure of a man suddenly arises above the low bushes. A quick dash to the south might save him, but he hesitates and it is too late. He is in federal uniform. He has passed the camp sentinels—he is skulking through the woods—he has planned to desert to the enemy. Five minutes after his capture he is at the reserve and ten minutes later he is on his way back to camp. And why should he seek to desert his flag—to cover his memory for all time with a stain worse than that of murder? He is young in years, but evidently a veteran in war. They question him, hoping he may exculpate himself, but he refuses to answer. He is left in the care of the provost guard and it is not until daylight comes again that other questions are put to him. He maintains silence. Then they charge him with being a spy. His face pales at the word, but he has nothing to say. He refuses to give his name or name his command. He is still obstinate when taken to headquarters. He is pale and anxious, but refuses to open his lips. Later on when put on trial for his life before a court martial he still pursued the policy he had evidently decided on from the first. As a would-be deserter he might bring forward excuses—have some sort of defence. The verdict might be imprisonment, but it would not be death. As a spy he will surely suffer the fate of spies. Then why not speak, name his captain, identify himself and ask the court to be merciful?

Never a word from him through the trial. Every captain in the division was called upon to identify him, but none could place him. The charge had to be that of spying, and the verdict had to be death. In the field, convicted by drumhead court martial, he would have been shot within a few hours. Here in winter quarters there was plenty of time to prepare a gallows. When informed of the verdict he caught his breath like one seized with sudden pain, and there was a twitching of the muscles around the mouth. Thirty seconds later he had regained control of himself.

It was a week before he was led out to die. After the findings of courts martial had been returned "approved" they gave him two days to prepare himself for eternity. The mockery of it was cruel. Men who know that their hours on earth are numbered cannot absolve their souls of sin. The spy felt that it was mockery, and he waved the chaplain away.

All hangings under military law are at sunrise. A company had been detailed to see the order carried out; a sergeant's guard to act as escort. It was a clear, frosty morning, and daylight seemed to come slowly. The condemned man was up and dressed and waiting. He was pale faced, but there was a look of resolution in his eye which I was glad to see. He would die game. A chaplain had come in with me. The spy waved him out and turned his back, that his elbows might be bound.

He saw the gallows long before we reached it, but his face betrayed no emotion. March! march! march! Only a soldier could have marched to the beat of the muffled drum going to his death. We reached the foot of the gallows at last. The spy looked up and calmly surveyed the structure and the dangling rope. He is assisted upon the rude ladder to the trap. A chaplain kneels on the rough boards and offers prayer, and then a hush falls upon the assemblage. Thank God that my orders were fully carried out when I had delivered my prisoner on the scaffold! The hangman awaits us. He is a volunteer from some guard house, and will get for his work a few dollars at headquarters.

"You have a message for some one, and I will deliver it!" I whispered in the prisoner's ear as his ankles were being tied.

"Yes, a message to Colonel —— of the ——th —— infantry. He will tell my friends. Get word to him that I died in the line of duty. Thank you—goodby!"

From the hour of his capture to the moment of his death these were the only words he uttered. He had scarcely spoken them when the hangman pulled the black cap over his face, stepped back to the lever, and two seconds later the trap fell with a crash, and the body was dangling in the air. It was only after peace came that I could deliver the message.

"Ah, poor Dick!" sighed the colonel, when I had finished. "Hung for a spy, and yet he was not a spy. He entered your lines to try to find a brother of his who had deserted and bring him back to duty—that and nothing more. The brother came back to us—poor Dick died on the gallows!"

Surrendered Six Times.

"I surrendered six times in one day during the war," writes Dr. Thomas S. Hawley in the St. Louis Republic. "It was at Holly Springs, Miss. I was with the union troops and was making my headquarters with a resident physician. The family was a very hospitable one, but there was one daughter about 19 years old, red-haired and a regular little spitfire, and a rebel through and through. When the confederates made their raid on the town they took us by surprise. I was in bed, and was awakened by the discharge of guns. I got up and dressed, and in the early morning light soon saw our boys coming into town from the outposts. I noticed one poor fellow, badly wounded, hobbling along the road, and took him. I carried him upstairs, put him in my bed and gave the best attention I could to his wounds. While I was engaged in this work, my host called me downstairs, saying 'You are wanted.' I knew what this meant. I went down and met a confederate officer, who demanded that I surrender. I did so, and explained that I had a wounded man in the house who demanded my attention. The officer very courteously paroled me on the spot. It seems, however, that the red-haired little rebel was mad because I had brought the wounded Yankee into the house, and she was determined to make trouble for me. She told some other confederate officer that I was there and he very promptly took me prisoner. He came at me with drawn sword and said, 'Surrender, sir!' 'I have surrendered,' I said. I again explained and was paroled and returned to my patient. This surrender business was repeated until six different confederates had taken me prisoner. Mr. Sixth Captor was a private, a boy about 18 years old, and he rushed in the house with his musket leveled and seemed determined to shoot. I have always had a suspicion that the girl put him up to it. I tried to explain that I had already been paroled five times, but it was hard work to get him to listen to anything. He kept yelling at me to surrender and made me stand with my hands high in the air while I made my explanation. I believe he would have shot me but for the interference of my host and some confederate officers who happened to come along."

Soldiers Monument at Cleveland.

The famous Perry monument in Cleveland, O., is to be moved to one of the suburban parks, and on the site will be reared a magnificent shaft in honor of the union soldiers of Cuyahoga county. The lower esplanade will cover 184 square feet of ground and from it there are to be four flights of semi-circular stairs leading to the upper esplanade. From this there will be a number of entrances, through heavy bronze doors, to the memorial room, an apartment forty feet square and twenty feet high. Here there will be a number of bronze figures of Ohio generals and several busts of prominent Cuyahoga county soldiers.

From the top of the memorial room there is to be a granite shaft 125 feet high. It will be surrounded by six bronze bands bearing the names of the principal battles of the rebellion. The shaft is to be surmounted by a bronze figure of Columbia wearing a soldier's overcoat, an innovation on the part of the sculptor that has subjected him to considerable criticism, both favorable and unfavorable.

Heroic groups of bronze statuary representing "The Color Guard," "The Defense of the Last Gun," "The Cavalry" and "The Navy," will occupy pedestals on the four sides of the memorial room. The monument will cost $200,000, and it is expected to be one of the finest of its kind in the United States. All the statuary has been completed, so that it simply remains now to put the structure together.

Shameful Confession

It is a shameful confession to make that many people are willing to use adulterated articles because they are cheaper, and in doing so often subjecting themselves to injurious effects, for it must not be supposed that those who are willing, at the cost of reputation and for the purpose of gain, to impose adulterated goods upon the public, would hesitate to use injurious adulterants.

Dr. Price has an established reputation for manufacturing good and pure articles, and his Delicious Flavoring Extracts of Vanilla, Lemon, etc., are the most perfect made.
