The sidewalks of the city are in a horrible condition just at present, owing to the neglect of the property owners and the city officials to see that the city ordinances are enforced. In many localities the middle of the street is the only place where pedestrians can walk without fear of being drowned.

George A. Holmes, who was one of the attorneys for the city in the famous park cases, has filed a bill for $3,000 with the city clerk for his services. He says he thinks he is entitled to as much as the other attorneys, but as he was city attorney during one of the years when the services were rendered he deducts from his bill $2,000, the amount of the year's salary.

NEWS FROM COUNCIL BLUFFS

Affairs of a Fraternal Insurance Society Starts a Lively Discussion.

ONE DIRECTOR CALLS THE REST BOODLERS

L. Biederman Makes Some Sensational Charges, and is in Turn Rather Harshly Criticized—Story of a Consolidation and Its Results.

L. Biederman of this city, who, until within the past few days was vice president of the Fidelity Protective union, has stirred up a little talk by publishing a letter in one of the papers a day or two ago, in which he makes some rather startling charges against several of the best known and most highly respected citizens of Council Bluffs. His feeling in the matter is the result of the absorption of the Fidelity Protective union by the National Fraternal association. The board of directors of the absorbed company at the time the consolidation took place was composed of Judge Joseph R. Reed, Fred H. Brown, J. C. Mitchell, W. O. Wirt, W. J. Jameson and Dr. J. H. Cleaver. Mr. Biederman claims that he refused to allow his name to be considered as a candidate for re-election to the office of vice president of the union, because he saw that the union was getting into deep water and that it probably would not last very long. The members had not the means to push the business to the front and compete with other like organizations and it seemed that the society which had been organized for the exclusive benefit of Odd Fellows would have to be abandoned. As long as a year ago he claims to have received an offer from President Crane of the Minneapolis Odd Fellows Insurance company by which it was agreed that the board of directors of the Fidelity Protective union should turn over their policies to the Minneapolis company and receive $1,000 each in return. The Fidelity board refused to sell out. But about ten days ago the Fidelity directors held a meeting at which it was decided to turn over the entire business to the National Fraternal association. Biederman now states in his letter that it is his belief that the directors of the company, whose names are mentioned above, were guilty of boodling, and that they received money from the National Fraternal in return for their turning over to the latter company the $8,750 or thereabouts that was in the treasury, together with the policies of insurance.

W. O. Wirt, who is mentioned as one of the alleged boodlers, was seen yesterday afternoon and asked for his explanation. He replied, in a vigorous manner, as follows: "The sum and substance of this hue and cry is that Biederman has set out to make an ass of himself. There was not a cent paid to any of the directors of the Fidelity Protective union. Biederman was opposed to the scheme of consolidation unless we would all agree that he should have a place in the directory of the new company. None of us would consent to that. He wasn't the man for the place and we all wanted Cleaver. Cleaver got the place, of course, and then Biederman was mad. I see he states that the Masonic Benevolent association is one of the purchasers. I wish you would say that the Masonic Benevolent association has not the slightest connection with the deal. As for his charges of boodling, there is not the slightest truth in them. The National Fraternal simply takes our contracts off our hands and agrees to fulfill them to the letter and to extend the business of the old company in a way that we with our limited capital could not do."

Rather Too Sensational.

A local paper that has earned the reputation of being somewhat unreliable and extravagant in its news columns has lately added sensationalism as a new feature. It announced yesterday morning that the fourth story of the new Pioneer Implement company's building on Main street collapsed Saturday night and seriously wrecked the structure. Wickham Bros. are the contractors and one of them talking about the report yesterday remarked: "It is a good thing that that paper does not have much of a circulation anywhere and none at all outside of town, or the people of the world would have a strangely mixed idea of Council Bluffs. It's becoming altogether too frisky and sensational, and is doing a good deal of harm to the town. There is not the least particle of truth in the published story of the wreck of the new building we are erecting for the Pioneer people. It is true a pile of sheeting on the fourth floor that had been carlessly stacked up on some joice that had been temporarily thrown across the center girders fell over and some of the planks dropped down upon the floor of the next story. Some of the loose joice were dislodged and carried down with them. A few of the planks were split and two of the joice were broken, and that's all the wreck that occurred. The damage will amount to about $1.75, but if that story had been published in some papers it would have damaged us and the building thousands of dollars, for people would have believed the building was unsafe, and that we are engaged in putting up shaky buildings.

For about a year past complaints have been coming in every little while on account of a man who stationed himself on some of the streets within a short distance of the court house and made a disgusting exhibition of himself for the benefit of ladies or little girls who might be passing. Last evening Officer Murphy was going along Sixth avenue near the corner of Sixth street when he was met by a little girl about 14 years of age, who told him that she had just been insulted in this way. It was about 6 o'clock and the man could see the officer plainly. When he saw that Murphy's attention had been called to him he took to his heels and sought refuge in the Catholic church. The officer followed him, and a few moments later had in charge a man whom he took for the fellow in question. He took him to the station, where he gave his name as E. W. McCready, and said he was a harness maker on lower Main street. He protested his innocence, though appearances were very much against him, and the police claim to be able to identify him beyond any doubt. He is thought to be the one who has made a practice of insulting ladies, and an effort will be made to show that the suspicions are correct. If he proves to be the right party it will go hard with him, for the indignant male relatives of the ladies and children who have been the victims of his bestiality will see that he gets the punishment he so richly deserves.

Death Roll.

BOSTON, Mass., Jan. 22.—Mrs. Charles H. Hoyt, known on the stage as Flora Walsh, died at the Parker this afternoon. She was taken ill less than a week ago. An abscess developed in her left ear and she was also troubled with a slight attack of œdema and bronchial affection.

There was nothing in her condition to excite alarm until Thursday. An alarm of fire in the hotel caused a high state of excitement among the guests, during which Mrs. Hoyt sprang out of bed and was nearly prostrated with fear. The next day pneumonia developed.

Miss Walsh was born in San Francisco twenty-two years ago. She made her first appearance on the stage in one of her husband's plays. Her funeral will take place Tuesday afternoon at Charleton, N. H.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Jan. 22.—Mrs. Catherine S. Sharp, wife of John S. Sharp, died here tonight. Mrs. Sharp was born February 1, 1778, and was within two weeks of being 115 years old. She was said to be the oldest pensioner on the pension rolls. She retained her faculties almost until the moment of death.

MILITARY MATTERS.

General Wheaton Talks About the Campaign Along the Rio Grande.

In a recent interview Brigadier General Wheaton, commander of the Department of Texas, said in speaking of the vexatious character of the duty on such a frontier and of the ease with which the regular forces could be eluded by bandits who have no desire to fight: "The troops in the field at present are all the Third cavalry and three troops of the Seventh cavalry from Fort Riley, Kan. There are camps established at various points along the border. Captain Hardie is located at the Comitas ranch and Captain Jackson of the Seventh cavalry is at Carrizo. Captains Chase and Hunter of the Third cavalry are patrolling on the railroad between Pena and Laredo and Lieutenants West and Langhorne are in command of two troops from Fort Ringgold and a company of the Twenty-third infantry at Rendalo. Then there are smaller detachments at San Ygnacio and other points along the border. The Rio Grande is effectually guarded from Laredo to Fort Ringgold and Hidalgo. Captain Dodd's troop of the Third Cavalry is at Fort Hancock. In short, all the available troops from this section and the three troops from Fort Riley are in the field. These are constantly on the alert, seeking information, and if hard work will accomplish anything the bandits will soon be run down. The military and the deputy United States marshals are working in harmony, and we have no reason to believe that there will be any conflict whatever." In reply to a question the general said: "Captain Bourke's trip to Washington was of a confidential nature. He did not bring any instructions in regard to the carrying on of the campaign on the border. That matter is left entirely to the discretion of the department commander." He did not think it probable that other troops would be sent to the Rio Grande.

"It is reported that General Schofield does not favor an encampment of 100,000 men of state troops at the Columbian fair. The assemblage of such a number of men would mean a large expenditure of money for an encampment ground, the drainage of it, and a proper water supply, to say nothing of its subsistence. There are not tents enough at the command of the army to supply shelter for a tenth of such a demand. The idea comes from H. Kyd Douglass, adjutant general of Maryland, but the material obstacles in the way seem insuperable. The general, however, thought that 5,000 regulars could be spared to attend the fair in order to make a good showing of our army, but he does not and never did approve of mobalizing the National Guardsmen at the exposition principally because he, like many other army officers, does not believe in the display of any soldiers other than the regulars.

Dame rumor has it that several officers of the army have recently been reported by various business firms for repeated remissness in settling and that the patience of the department in dealing with such neglectful officers is pretty well exhausted. This subject is an old one in the department and is differently regarded by secretaries of the army. A late secretary refused to prosecute officers for their delinquencies in this method and upon one occasion wrote a New York business firm that "the department is in no sense a collecting agency." Recent secretaries, however, showed no patience with officers who neglected their private obligations. The private affairs of officers so intimately affect their official character and reputation, also their status with brother officers, that it would seem to be properly the duty of a secretary to enforce honorable and fair observance on their part in private as well as public business.

The United Service, London, has the following suggestion which is recommended to our army officers: "The placing in soldiers' barrack rooms of a card giving the exact distances to some of the prominent buildings within sight is looked upon as an excellent way of aiding the men unconsciously in judging distances. Of course it is not supposed that by itself it would prove of much use; but combined with the regular instruction, it will materially help men to better appreciate and more intelligently apply judging distance drill, and involuntarily a soldier will be likely to get into the habit of estimating the distance of any conspicuous object that may casually come within his observation. As the increased ranges rendered possible by the introduction of smaller rifles, correct elevation is likely to be more important than exactness in the direction of fire."

The house military committee has made a favorable report on a bill to provide that whenever General Greely, the present chief signal officer, vacates his office his successor shall have the rank only of lieutenant colonel.

Colonel Guy V. Henry, the gallant commander of the famous Ninth cavalry, will spend his sick leave in the south.

Mrs. Gorton, wife of Colonel Gordon of the Sixth cavalry, has returned to Fort Nebraska, after spending a few weeks with relatives in Kansas.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

That Hoyt's plays are funny goes without saying, and none more so than "A Hole in the Ground," which comes to Boyd's theater on tomorrow evening for a two nights engagement. The entire three acts are full to the brim of bright, witty satire and music, and specialty features without end. Charles Cowles in the character of the stranger has a part that suits his capabilities, and from which he succeeds in extracting an endless amount of enjoyment for the audience. To hear him say "Is that clock right?" and see him take refuge in the "swearing room" is sufficient unto the ends of laughter for days to come. Frank Lawton as the station agent also gives us the stage creation of a typical railroad official who exists in real life, as those who have traveled much can abundantly testify. Then there is the pert lunch counter girl and the pretty telegraph operator, played respectively by Miss Virginia Earl and Miss Margaret May, who played Taggs in the "County Fair" last season; Barry Maxwell as the tramp, the young clopers and the "Tarriers," all with their specialties to introduce, aside from the laugh-provoking scenes and situations, in which Mr. Hoyt has placed them in his satire. Hoyt's name and laughter go hand in hand. The sale of seats opens at 9 o'clock this morning.

GOVERNOR ALTGELD ILL.

His Condition Such as to Excite Alarm Among His Friends.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., Jan. 22.—The condition of Governor Altgeld's health continues to excite apprehension in the minds of his friends. Ever since inauguration day he has been practically invisible to the public, and the few who succeeded in gaining interviews with the governor report his appearance that of a man unfitted to be weighted down by the cares of state. Private Secretary Dose today reports the condition of the governor somewhat improved over yesterday. He admits his health is such as demands perfect rest, and the only means of securing this appears to be to seek a change of scenery and climate.

Upon the advice of the attending physician, Dr. E. S. Fowler, Governor Altgeld will leave the city at the earliest day the condition of his health will permit and proceed at once to Ashville N. C., or to Florida, where he will remain for some weeks and until he thoroughly recovers from his present debilitated condition. During the absence of Governor Altgeld from the state Lieutenant Governor Gill, according to the provisions of the constitution, becomes acting governor and will be vested with all the powers now exercised by the chief executive Sinclair in the Tombs.

NEW YORK, Jan. 22.—Charles S. Sinclair, the bookkeeper of the Armour Packing company, who disappeared from this city on November 14, after a defalcation of $19,000, was returned to this city today. He was taken to the Tombs police court and remanded by Justice Ryan. Sinclair took $7,300 in cash with him when he disappeared. He turned over $5,300 of this at police headquarters today.

VOICELESS LEADERS NOW

Two Union Leaders Join the Mighty Army in the Great Beyond.

DEATH TOUCHED THEM AND THEY SLEPT

Pathetic Story of Southern Loyalty—A Reminder of "Little Mac's" Mistakes—Sherman's Greeting—Notes of Nebraska Posts.

General Rufus Ingalls, who died in New York, January 15, was born in Denmark, Me., August 28, 1820. He graduated from the West Point military academy in 1843, and was assigned to the rifle corps, being transferred to the dragoons two years later. He participated in several battles of the Mexican war, and in 1847 became assistant quartermaster with the rank of captain. He served in California and Oregon, was in Colonel Steptoe's expedition across the continent, and from 1856 to 1860 was on the staff of General Harney at Fort Vancouver, participating in the San Juan affair during that time. In April, 1861, he was sent with reinforcements for Fort Pickens, and in July of the same year he joined the army of the Potomac. He was appointed aide-de-camp to General McClellan with the rank of lieutenant colonel, and in January, 1862, major in the quartermaster's department. He was chief quartermaster of the army of the Potomac from 1862 to 1865. May 23, 1863, he became brigadier general of volunteers, and July 29, 1866, colonel and assistant quartermaster general. He was at the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, and other engagements leading up to the surrender of General Lee. He was brevetted brigadier general in the regular army in 1864, and major general for gallant and meritorious services during the war in 1865; was mustered out of the volunteer service in September, 1866, and was chief quartermaster at New York from April, 1869, till July, 1876. He was again stationed there in March, 1881, and was relieved in March, 1882, when he became quartermaster general of the army. He was placed on the retired list at his own request July, 1883.

General Joseph Bartlett.

General Joseph J. Bartlett of New York, brother of Rev. William Alvin Bartlett, of New York, died in Baltimore January 14. General Bartlett was a gallant soldier, participating in every battle fought by the Army of the Potomac. He was United States minister to Sweden for three years, and two years deputy commissioner of pensions under Cleveland.

Joseph Jackson Bartlett was born in Binghamton, N. Y., in 1834, November 21. At the breaking out of the war he had just put out his shingle as a young lawyer in his native place. With 200 young men he marched up to the court house and enlisted on the first call for troops. As they were divided into companies he was chosen captain of the first company and at the formation of the Twenty-seventh regiment of New York state volunteers at the rendezvous at Elmira he was chosen major and General Slocum was elected colonel. The Twenty-seventh, through the influence of its colonel, who was a graduate of West Point, was hurried forward and participated in the first battle of Bull Run. It was complimented on rallying and staying the stampede. General Slocum was wounded and promoted, and Major Bartlett was chosen colonel of the regiment. He was made a brigadier general of volunteers October 4, 1862, for meritorious and distinguished services during the campaign of that year before Richmond. He was afterwards made a brevet major general of volunteers to date from August 1, 1864. He commanded brigades and divisions in the Fifth and Sixth Army corps until Lee surrendered at Appomattox, April 9, 1865. He was wounded frequently, although slightly. His cap and coats were frequently pierced with bullets, and horses were several times shot from under him.

Since the close of the war the general devoted himself to peaceful pursuits. He was one of the most popular of veterans, and was everywhere respected by those who had served with or against him.

Demonstrated His Loyalty.

Here is a good war story by Representative Sayers of Texas, as given by the Washington Post:

"In the early part of the war," he said, "when nearly every southern man in the north went back to his own section, Captain Duncan McRae, stationed at Fort Craig, N. M., was an exception. His southern birth was known, and he was regarded with suspicion. Life was being made very unhappy for him by the insinuations of his northern comrades just at the time when our brigade passed near Fort Craig on its way from Texas into Missouri. Captain McRae's battery opposed us, and I never saw men fight with greater bravery than was shown in that brief battle by McRae and his men. Out of the entire company only five men escaped alive. McRae was killed, his body falling alongside of his guns.

"Under a flag of truce a union officer came across the battlefield. I met him and happened to know him. He told me in the course of our conversation that McRae on the previous night had spoken to his comrades of their suspicions, and had said that he proposed to prove his loyalty on the morrow by his death. 'I shall never leave the battlefield alive,' he said. When morning came he seemed unusually happy. 'I have seen my specter in a dream,' he said, 'and now I know that welcome death will come.' And so it did. The man had sacrificed himself rather than endure the imputations cast on his loyalty.

"What became of the guns? They were thrown down a well. I know where they are, and I have a letter in my pocket now asking me to see the War department and have them given into the custody of the state of Texas."

A Reminder of McClellan's Mistakes.

A batch of manuscript belonging to the late cavalry officer, General J. Irving Gregg, formerly of Lewisburg, Pa., has been found and has created quite a sensation among Pennsylvania Grand Army men. It includes a copy of the report of the then Colonel Gregg to General McClellan, when the latter commanded the Army of the Potomac. Colonel Gregg was detailed as commander of the McClellan outposts, and while occupying that position discovered that General Johnston of the rebel army was moving on McClellan's flank. He reported the movement to McClellan at once, but the latter could not be convinced of the accuracy of Gregg's report, and did not take the necessary precautions.

Three days after Gregg submitted his report McClellan found out to his sorrow that the subordinate officer was correct. Johnston suddenly attacked the union forces on their flank and McClellan was forced to retreat. The celebrated seven days fighting in the Peninsula ensued, the southerners pursuing the union army to the James river, where the hard-fought battle of Malvern hill followed. McClellan was relieved and Pope, who was placed in command, met Johnston at Bull Run and was fearfully routed. It is contended that had General McClellan taken the advice of Gregg when the latter first reported Johnston's contemplated move on the flank of the union forces, Richmond could have been taken and the backbone of the rebellion broken.

KANSAS' POLITICAL MUDDLE.

Republicans Meet to Make Concessions to Defeat the Populists.

TOPEKA, Kan., January 22.—Only senatorial candidates and their workers remained on the field of the legislative battle today. Most of the members of the legislature passed Sunday at their homes. The senatorial situation is the only interesting thing in view now, the two rival houses of the legislature having determined to make no effort to settle the muddle in which they find themselves until after the election of senator. The senatorial situation is quite as much of a muddle as the situation in the house. The populists do not know whether to nominate a democrat or a straight populist. The republicans don't know whether to nominate a republican or a democrat, and the five democrats who hold the balance of power on joint ballot don't know whether they want a stalwart democrat or a fusionist. None of these questions will be determined until tomorrow, when all three parties will hold caucuses. The democrats now hold the key to the senatorial situation, and they will probably join with the republicans in the election of a stalwart democrat—either A. A. Harris of Fort Scott or Bailey Waggener of Atchison.

The republicans are willing to make almost any kind of a deal with the democrats, if by so doing they can only euchre the populists.

Pears' Soap

The skin ought to be clear; there is nothing strange in a beautiful face.

If we wash with proper soap, the skin will be open and clear, unless the health is bad. A good skin is better than a doctor.

The soap to use is Pears'; no alkali in it. It is perhaps the only soap in the world with no alkali in it.

All sorts of stores sell it, especially druggists; all sorts of people use it.
