CAPTIVATING WIVES OF THE SCHEMERS

How They Planned to Entertain the Successful Candidate—Members of the Third House Deserving Lincoln—Little Legislation Looked For.

LINCOLN, Neb., Feb. 7.—[Special Telegram to THE BEE.]—It is not overestimating the number to say that a thousand post mortems have been held on the senatorial result this afternoon and evening. Nine out of every ten of the participants in these discussions say, "I told you so," and refer to the equity that has all along been manifest between Patrick and Johnston.

The outcome is no surprise to the many who have feared from the start that this feeling of bitterness would result in these two candidates racing down the stretch neck and neck, each refusing to yield a point or concede anything to the other, and thus courting inevitable defeat.

Senator Paddock left for his home at Beatrice this afternoon and it is stated that he will remain there. He informed a friend before leaving the city that he would not return to Washington, as he did not feel like meeting his fellow senators and receiving their expressions of condolence over his defeat.

Mr. Thurston likewise packed his grip and started for home as soon as the battle was decided.

One of the Pleasures. On the other hand, Judge Allen is the hero of the hour. He had already begun to find out what it means to be elected to such a position, as his room at the Lindell has been the objective point of office seekers of every description from the very moment that the result of the decisive ballot was announced.

It would surprise one to see the number and character of the individuals who call on him, or the host of seekers to make him think that they have. Even the man who delivered the telegram to him a week ago, requesting his presence here, is in the field with a petition asking for an appointment and his sole reason for pressing such a request is that he delivered the telegram.

Charges of Treachery. The friends of Senator Paddock are charged with the republicanism which give him the lion that had been promised him by the caucus, and they are urging this as the reason that he was unable to carry out his agreement. They say that had all the republicans voted for Paddock as their names were called he would have been able to turn over votes that he had on the outside, but no one takes any stock in any of these assertions.

Misery for the Democrats. It need not be supposed that the legislative field will be fearless now that the senatorial fight is out of the way. The decision that has turned the democratic hopes loose in the scramble for federal appointments and has renewed the fight between the burling leaders of the party, is a source of great concern to the friends of the party.

When He Went Over. "I was one of the number of republicans who with General Leese sought to introduce the anti-monopoly idea to the republicans in the senate, and I was one of the number who were disappointed in the corporation on the organization. When it became evident to me that the corporation was not going to be introduced, I was one of the number who were disappointed in the corporation on the organization.

Morton's Clever Counter. As soon as Morton heard of that he arranged for a dinner for the first time since the residence of Andrew Jackson Sawyer this evening, at which Allen and a choice assortment of Mortonites were to be the guests.

Boy and the Dinner Party. Morton heard of this move shortly before midnight, and the indications now are that all the roads between here and the national capital will be filled with special political trains within the next two weeks.

All Are Friends Now. Boyd and Morton met this afternoon and spoke to each other for the first time in many a day. It was given out that the packing house and "sleeter house" factions had then and there buried the hatchet, but it was a noticeable fact that the interview was conducted in such a manner that both hands and heads of the bloody weapon were both left above ground and both Morton and Boyd retained a tight grip on the hilt.

Much Inconvenience and Suffering Caused in the City. CHICAGO, Ill., Feb. 7.—Today has been the coldest of all cold days this city has experienced in several years. The mercury yesterday stood at 47 below zero and this morning it was 102 below zero and it is a little less than ten hours. Today it crawled up in a weary sort of way until 9 p. m., and then it began to slip down again.

There is little prospect that anything will be accomplished in the way of legislation, as the senate is a graveyard that will double discount the upper house of any former legislature in that respect. Members of the house lamenting their inability to have home measures brought up there, and the indications are that they will continue to wallow in the mire of political expediency.

Looking After Allen's Ermine. Governor Crouse was apprised of the fact this afternoon that he was called upon to appoint a successor on the bench to Judge Allen. He was waited upon by two assistants for the place, who were apprised by wire this morning that something was liable to happen, and they hurried in by the great train.

Morton's Little Game. Mr. Morton is congratulating himself that he brought Allen into the senatorial race. He says he telegraphed him a week ago to come down to Lincoln. This is probably true, but Morton did not call for Allen to come to Lincoln to be elected, but only wanted to use him to consolidate the popular vote in order to give a republican a third term.

JUDGE ALLEN INTERVIEWED. Expression of the Private Views of the Senator-Elect. LINCOLN, Neb., Feb. 7.—[Special Telegram to THE BEE.]—A representative of THE BEE called upon Judge Allen at his room tonight, and in spite of the anxiety of a score or more people, a confidential plan, in which the senator-elect himself, who has been in Lincoln for several days, was the only person present.

When He Went Over. "I was one of the number of republicans who with General Leese sought to introduce the anti-monopoly idea to the republicans in the senate, and I was one of the number who were disappointed in the corporation on the organization. When it became evident to me that the corporation was not going to be introduced, I was one of the number who were disappointed in the corporation on the organization.

Has Made No Pledges. "No man holds a written pledge from me regarding the distribution of patronage or the organization of the senate. I have said and I repeat, it is a matter of public record that I am in sympathy with the republican party, and I am in sympathy with the republican party, and I am in sympathy with the republican party.
