Mr. George J. Crane has returned from the Pacific coast and will remain here a week or so with his family. He is so well known here as a simon-pure rustler and has been so prominently connected with various business enterprises that it will be no surprising announcement to those who are familiar with the same marvelous success as attending him in his new enterprise as has marked his career here. With him is associated another well known Council Bluffsite, D. F. Bellinger, who during his residence here, has made a reputation for himself as one of the most skillful surgeons and successful physicians in this part of the west.

THOUGHT IT WAS CONSUMPTION

A Case Showing How Advanced Bronchitis and Tuberculosis is Often Mistaken for Consumption.

THOUGHT IT WAS CONSUMPTION

Miss Alice Cartwright lives with her sister, Mrs. John Smith, at 1215 Leavenworth street, Omaha. She is a bright and handsome young woman and was a very graphic story of her illness. She says:

THOUGHT IT WAS CONSUMPTION

My father's family is consumptive and this fact has been a great anxiety to me. I began to cough and feel very weak. So when, last April, I began to decline, I believed I had consumption. I lived in New York, and had many friends who were anxious to see me. I already had this disease, for three brothers—all young men—had died of it.

THOUGHT IT WAS CONSUMPTION

My first trouble was phlegmation of the joints and muscles and then I took a frightful cold which settled on my lungs. I began to cough and my lungs became sore and my breath short. I had pain through the chest and around my heart. My appetite left me. I got terribly weak and my flesh slowly wasted away. In July, I had my first attack of consumption. I went to St. Louis for my health, but got no better, and then came to Omaha. When I first saw Dr. Shepard I was in a pitiable condition. My cough had become very violent, my chest was sore, and my breath very short. I was unable to do any work, and I was very nervous. I had been told that Dr. Shepard's method of treatment was the best, and I had heard that he had cured many cases of consumption. I had heard that he had cured many cases of consumption. I had heard that he had cured many cases of consumption.
