Asked for a Receiver.

Mr. Henry C. Howe of Illinois unfolds a grievance in Federal court, in which he claims that a receiver should be appointed for the Ponoa Milling company. He alleges that Mr. S. K. Bittenbender, the manager and secretary of the company, has covered the concern with bogus debts and is now trying to dispose of the property. Having a controlling interest in the stock, it is alleged that Mr. Bittenbender has power to dispose of the property to the detriment of the other stock holders.

Mr. Howe has asked that a receiver be appointed for the plant in order to protect the small stockholders, of which he is one. Judge Bundy has set the case for a hearing on May 10 and in the meantime Mr. Bittenbender is enjoined from disposing of the property.

Maiden Bound Over.

EXPOSITION PLANS.

Job Printers Discuss the Advisability of a Large Exhibit. The job printers of the city who are members of the Manufacturers' association held a meeting yesterday afternoon to consider the advisability of making a large exhibit at the exposition which opens in Omaha on May 22.

There were some difficulties to be overcome, but the printers were of the opinion that with the large number of job printing houses in the city it ought to be possible to make a good showing. They talked of moving out some of their large cylinder presses and showing the method of running off large jobs. There was also talk of moving out a lithograph plant and several other schemes were proposed. The meeting adjourned without coming to any decision as to what kind of an exhibit they would make, but each one promised to look over his office and report at another meeting to be held in a few days, when definite plans will be adopted.

The subject of home patronage came up during the meeting and the fact came out that a good many local firms that had their printing done in the east had transferred their business to home concerns. At the same time a good many firms that depend entirely upon Omaha business for support still have their printing done in the east.

The names of two Omaha banks were brought up that have their checks printed out of the state. The two largest hardware houses in the city were mentioned as having recently given order for catalogues, amounting to a good many hundred dollars, to printers outside of the state. One of these hardware houses paid more for the job in the east than an Omaha house would have charged for the work. The other firm did not even give the local printers a chance to bid on the job.

WAR IN THE BOARD.

Three Majors Have a Squabble Over the Lard Street Pavement. The three majors of the Board of Public Works unsharped their instruments of war and went to each other's pommel yesterday afternoon. Their particular and favorite mode of punishment is tongue-lashing, and in this they are well classed in the category of experts. The trouble arose over the resolution of the council instructing the contractor to complete the paving on Lard street from Twelfth to Fourteenth streets, under the supervision of the board.

The contractor was ordered to stop work by the board, for the reason that the contractor called for white Colorado sandstone, while he was using the red. Tuesday night the council took a hand and ordered the work to proceed. Yesterday Major Birkhauser detailed an inspector to look after the work in case it was resumed, although no orders were issued by him to have the contractor proceed.

During the afternoon the board got together to take action upon the council's resolution. An opinion from the city attorney was read, and he recommended that the best way out of the difficulty was to require an indemnifying bond from the contractor, and in that manner the city would be protected against any damages that may arise, and it would not be left holding the sack in case a property owner received the payment of the paving tax because red stone had been used when white stone should have been.

Major Balcombe offered a resolution to that effect. Major Birkhauser then told of sending the inspector to look after the work. This caused Major Furay's ire to leap forth in profanity and in language more forcible than elegant, he demanded to know by what right the chairman had dared to detail an inspector for such a purpose. He didn't like the Balcombe resolution either, and sat down and drew up one to his liking. It was to the effect that the contractor be allowed to proceed as soon as the indemnifying bond was furnished.

"I'll not support any such a resolution," said Major Birkhauser. "Let the contractor go ahead and let me alone. I will allow the estimates or accept the work."

"Well, not by a d-d sight," said Major Furay. "Been too much of that kind of work for me. I think you are crooked and an old sneak."

"Well," thundered Major Birkhauser, "I am not as big a sneak as you two. You are always sneaking and nosing around here. I have taken lots of off you and have got about enough and don't propose to take any more."

"Glad you've got enough," retorted Furay. "You bet I have been trying to give you enough, and will give you a lot more."

"You bet I will," said Furay, "I'll come, getting an opportunity to slip in a word, 'let it go. There is no need of my preaching at our own funeral. When he wants to do what he does it looks to me as if the tail were getting bigger than the dog."

They continued to pour hot shot into each other for several minutes. The atmosphere of the room soon became so heated that both Furay and Balcombe gathered up their resolutions and departed, the meeting breaking up in confusion. Major Birkhauser called a train for Denver a few minutes later.

As the matter now stands the contractor has orders from the council to complete the lard street paving, but he is not compelled to furnish an indemnifying bond to protect the city.

BOSTON STORE SELLS IT NOW

S. P. Morse's Fine New Dress Goods Stock on Sale Tomorrow

AT BOSTON STORE

Hardly Ready to Open for Business. Creditors Take This Elegant New Dry Goods Stock and Sacrifice It to Boston Store's Cash.

It is only just to Mr. S. P. Morse to give him credit for buying as fine a stock of dress goods as could be found.

His idea was to create a store carrying a line of goods finer than the finest, and better than the best to be found in Omaha heretofore, and perhaps he might have succeeded. But, he only got so far that he did indeed select all such goods and have them in his possession for a brief while, and then his dream was realized (with this difference).

BOSTON STORE GOT HIS STOCK. In addition to the above high class of dress goods, he carried a popular line of dress goods, which will be found very desirable.

Come to Boston Store tomorrow if you want the bargain of your life. Boston Store proposes to make this sale a famous success.

Strike while the iron is hot, and when the excitement is at its height, that's our motto.

We bought the stock at the moment when the creditors were anxious and wanted hard cash and we gave it to them.

We have a fabulous bargain and we'll share it with you. Come tomorrow.

Never before has such an opportunity occurred. Never has there been a time when a stock of dress goods and dry goods has been sold before the doors of the store were fairly open to the public.

It is almost impossible to realize it. This stock is so new, so fresh, so nice, that it is a delight to look upon, and yet it's going to be sacrificed.

It's all new; it's an opening stock; it's the best of everything, and the sale will be one of the crowning glories of the Boston Store's career.

We beg you to come. It's for your interest. It is the greatest money saving sale you'll ever attend.

We say it, we mean it and we are. BOSTON STORE, N. W. Cor. 16th and Douglas.
