Showing How Bills Are Audited. The careless manner in which the board audits the bills of these institutions is shown in the following voucher, No. 1,596:

A glance at this was sufficient to see that 298 bushels of corn at 45 cents would not amount to $234.40, but that there was an error of just $100.30 in this bill, yet it was allowed, running the gauntlet of the bookkeeper, steward and superintendent, and a warrant drawn by the state auditor for the full amount and charged against the "board and clothing fund" of the institution by the Board of Public Lands and Buildings. An interview with Mr. Osborne reveals the fact that when he came to $100 his the warrant the error was discovered, and that he gave J. R. Nichol, the steward, a check for $100, but a thorough investigation of the books and records fails to disclose the facts of the whereabouts of this sum so returned by Farmer Osborne.

returned by Farmer Osborne.

A further examination of the vouchers developed the fact that Mr. Hasson, while at the institution, was somewhat of a sportsman and financier as well as a physician. Not only was the ammunition he used in his field sports charged up to the state, but the game bagged was also sold to the state. Among others is one allowed on January 15, 1892, voucher No. 70,187, as follows:

mountain sheep at an insane hospital is not clear, yet this voucher was duly audited and clear, yet this voucher was duly audited and paid and no questions asked by the board.

Colonel Simpson, the present steward, was very much surprised when asked to show that rare specimen, and declared that no such property had been turned over to him. Employes were also ignorant of any such animal or specimen of such animal over having been in the possession of the institution.

Further inquiry showed that under the Further inquiry showed that under the Wilkinson, Hasson and Nichol administration of the Norfolk hospital that members and relatives of their families combined, who made their home at the institution and were boarded at the expense of the state, numbered thirty-two people. Such are some of the evidences of care-Such are some of the evidences of care-lessness and loose business methods found to have prevailed in the management of the Norfolk hospital under the administration of the present alleged overworked Board of Public Lands and Buildings. This state of affairs, it is but fair to say, will not be tolerated in the future by the officials now in charge of that institution. Dr. C. B. Lytle, the superintendent, is a gentleman exceptionally well qualified for the position. exceptionally well qualified for the position, not only professionally but also from the point of business ability, while Colonel J. SENATOR BECKWITH'S REMEDY.

Opinions of the Wyoming Statesman on the Monetary Situation.

United States Senator A. C. Beckwith of Wyoming arrived in the city yesterday. The senator freely expressed his views on the financial condition of the country and thinks he has discovered a remedy to protect the gold reserve.

"I am not absolutely in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver. In fact, I am opposed to any legislation that will make the United States a dumping ground for foreign silver," said the senator. "However, 1 would like to see some favorable legislation that will benefit silver, provided that congress correctly agrees on what constitutes a gress correctly agrees on what constitutes a silver dollar. If 4124 grains is not sufficient to make a silver dollar a legal tender, let them put in more. That silver dollar should then be a legal tender for everything due within the United States. When that is established and it is accepted as a legal standard issue certificates in denomination from $1 to $1,000 in payment for the bullion. These certificates should also be legal tenders without interest, same as the silver dollar for which they were issued. Then, if any without interest, same as the silver dollar for which they were issued. Then, if any foreign country wanted to bring their silver to us and take our certificates in exchange without interest under such a law, I can see no reason why we should not accede.

"I am in favor of making these certificates payable strictly in subsequence."

"I am in favor of making these certificates payable strictly in silver and not left outlonal with the United States treasurer to pay in either gold or silver. If it was left to his option and payment in silver not specified, it is within the range of possibilities that he would give gold the preference, and that would break in on the gold reserve. Inasmuch as these silver certificates were legal tenders I would then regularly pay the soldiers and pensioners of the United States in silver certificates. It would thus distribute the money in small quantities throughout the entire United States. In fact it would be the best possible means for national distribution of silver. We have now $100,000,000 in silver. This procedure would save the same amount of gold in our nation's vaults and also $50,000,000 per year which we are now paying out under the Sherman act for silver, which is accumulating in the vaults of the United States and not being used.

"If the treasurer should issue bonds and sell them for gold, our silver would still remain idle in the vaults and we, as a nation, would be paying interest on gold and leave our silver, which is equally as good as gold.

main idle in the vaults and we, as a nation, would be paying interest on gold and leave our silver, which is equally as good as gold when made a legal tender, lying inoperative in our treasury. I am in favor of the repeal of the Sherman act, provided that we can have an act on silver as a substitute, that will meet the views I have just expressed.

"I do not anticipate any panic if the American people will keep cool and not get rattled. It looks a little exciting in some financial

SHAKESPEARE'S SEVEN AGES OF MAN.

"The sixth age shifts Into the lean and slippered pantaloon, With spectacle on nose and pouch on side; His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide For his shrunk shank; and his big, manly voice Turning again towards children treble, pipes And whistles in his sound."-"As You Like It."

In the afternoon of life, such as Shakespeare describes, men like sensible reading, and they like facts from a reliable source. Such a source is the Encyclopedia Britannica, which contains matter suitable to all ages, and which can be bought by the poorest man for an outlay of ten cents a day. The reason grandfather reads with spectacles is because his eyes have flattened with age and become less convex.

The whole science of optics is to be found in the Britannica, and then the scholarly old gentleman can read of the optical arrangements of the eye; of the laws in relation to the microscope and telescope and the wave theory of light.

Shakespeare meant no offense to age in describing the old man as a "lean and slippered pantaloon," The pantaloon was a character in the old Italian farces, and it appears in Christmas pantomine of today. It represented, as Warburton observes, a thin, emaciated old man in slippers.

The Encyclopedia Britannica tells all about slippers of all kinds, as well as of boot and shoemaking. It also tells about old farces in which the pantaloon appeared. Even the youthful hose with which the old gentleman covers his "shrunk shanks" cannot escape the keen Britannica, which contains most interesting articles on stockings and hosiery.

"Pipes" and whistles are adequately dealt with in the wonderful book, which is not only instructive and amusing, but very entertaining as well. The lean and slippered pantaloon should never be without his Britannica.

It CIVES him joy from the cradle to the grave.

The Murray hotel underwent a change of management at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. B. Silloway, proprietor of the house since September 1, 1888, at that hour dropped out, leaving Thomas Murray, owner of the property, in full possession.

Mr. Silloway will leave Omaha June 1 to take charge of the Hotel Omaha at Fiftyfifth and Lexington streets. Chicago, a property in which he and Frank E. Alexan der are interested.

The working force of the Murray will remain the same under the new management which, by the way, will probably be again changed within a short time. It is reported that Ira Higbee, formerly of Omaha and lately of Nebraska City, is likely to step into the proprietorship. E. K. Criley is also understood to have negotiations for a lease under way, but Mr. Murray declines to state what has been or Murray declines to state what has been, or is to be, done in this connection. Mr. Silloway's reasons for giving up the hotel are various, but the principal one is the fact that he has tried to pay $18,000 annual rental, a price, he says, the business of the house does not warrant; and as business during the past three or four months has been especially dull, he and Mr. Murray made the arrangement above recounted.
