YALE TRIUMPHS ONCE MORE

Harvard's Eight Finishes Second in the Great 'Varsity Race.

BLUE STILL FLOATS ABOVE THE CRIMSON

But it Was a Beautiful Race and Harvard Was Only Four Lengths Behind at the Finish-Crowds of Enthuslasts on Hand.

New London, June 30 .- Everything was blue here today. It was a blue half dozen and two of athletes that sent their blue clad and bedecked supporters into a frenzy of delight; it was a blue crowd whose finger tips bumped against the furthermost recesses of their empty pockets, because their views previous to the race had a crimson tinge, and the wind blew the surface of the course into millions of little blue waves, which scampered around in every direction, causing fear of postponement in every heart, But in spite of the wind, the rough water and a vigorous crimson kick, the race was rowed, and it's all over but the shouting.

Yale's was the victory and she defeated Harvard by four lengths, covering the four miles in 25:01½. Harvard's time was 25:15. Thousands of people who had congregated in the craft on the river saw, with their field glasses, eight blue glants leave their quar-ters at Gales Ferry and with shell hoisted on their broad shoulders make their way slowly to the dock. Then they saw a similar procession of crimson athletes put their boat in the water and move toward the referce's boat. Then came preliminaries and "They're off!" from a thousand throats. Looked Very Much Like Yale.

The blue was first at the start, and there was a tremendous cheer for Yale and a frantic shaking of banners as the nose of her boat appeared to forge ahead. The observation steamers would list to the right or left in the direction taken by the spectators in their anxiety to see the struggle. The race was one of the finest over seen on the Thames. For the first mile of the course the crews were separated by less than one-third of a boat's length. Harvard was in the lead and it looked at first as though she would win the race. Her powerful and rapid stroke sent her at a pace which Yale could not count, but in that very thing lay Harvard's defeat. The strain of her furious pace was too much for her crew. The oars began to splash and the men began to go to pieces. Yale's magnificent form came to the front. Her shell crept on Harvard's. Soon they were even. Harvard put forth a final effort to save herself, but the men were not equal to the occasion. Yale's shell glided gradually ahead. Then men in the middle of her boat soon saw the bow of their opponents'. A few more strokes and there was water between the boats, and from then on the victory was only a question of time. She forged ahead slowly, and amid the blowing of horns and cannon, the waving of flags and the cheers of her supporters wept across the line with Harvard four full boat lengths behind her. To Be Sure They Were Tired.

As soon as the crews passed the finish the men dropped their oars and lay back on their seats exhausted. Everybody thought some one would faint, but none did. The coxswain splashed water on the oarsmen's faces and in a minute they were all at their oars again.

Yale pulled over to the float just above the shore line bridge and her men tumbled out of their boat as fresh looking as though they had just been taking a spin for pleasure. The Yale launch steamed up to the float and general admiration meeting followed. ob Cook threw his arms around each man's neck and told him he had done splendidly The other coachers followed and though they were not quite so affectionate as Bob, their actions left no doubt in the minds of the spectators that they were greatly pleased with the eight men's work. Then hey all piled into the launch and went back to their quarters.

And the Great Race Was Over. Harvard's eight, after the race, pulled over to their launch and soon disappeared up the river. Then followed a great scramble among the boats to get back to their respective piers. All wheeled about and made for the draw bridge. They were generall landed up, but no serious accident occurred As soon as the boats touched their dock the hundreds of rejoicing or sorrowful passen-gers sprang off and hurried to get out of town. The station was soon packed with a mass of screeching and half-frantic humanity. The girls were as enthusiastic as the When the Yale men got back to their quarters, Johnson, who has rowed for two years in the bow, was elected captain of the SPARKS OF SPORT. Omaha Against Kearney.

The Omaha Lacrosse club will leave Monday night with colors flying, for Kearney, where, on Tuesday, they will battle with the team of that city for the lacrosse champion ship of Nebraska. Never has the home team been in anything like their present condition and never have they had such a strong twelve, nor such confidence in themselves a low, and if Kearney wins on Tuesday it will only be by magnificent playing. The Omahas have been practicing every night at the Young Mon's Christian association park in conjunction with the Young Men's Christian Association Lacrosse club, which, by the way, is coming to the front in great shape and will shortly tackle the Omahas. the promising players of the Young Men's Christian associations who are expert with their sticks might be mentioned: McDougall, Anderson, McConnell, Coleman and Sheldon. No city in the west is so entirely and enthusiastically lacrosse as Kearney and a large attendance is predicted for Tuesday afternoon, the railroads all running special trains for the game. Last week the Lincolns went to Kearney and were badly beaten by three goals to none and played to an attendance of over 2,000, the city going wild over the victory of the Kearneys. DEATH OF ANTHONY J. DREXEL.

He is Stricken with Apoplexy and Dies Sundenly at Carlsbad.

PHILADELPHIA, June 30 .- Drexel & Co. received the startling information in a cable gram from Carlabad at 12:30 this afternoon that Anthony J. Drexel, the head of the banking house of Drexel, Morgan & Co., Yew York; Drexel, Harges & Co., Paris, and Drexel & Co., this city, had died suddealy from apoplexy. The message was signed "H. C. Haskins," and although Mr. Haskins, who is a son-in-law of the minister to Germany, Runyon, is known to have been a warm personal friend of the great banker and to have been at Carisbad with him, the authenticity of the cablegram was questioned.

George C. Thomas, a member of the Philadelphia firm, feared that some one had forzed Mr. Haskins' name to a bogus mes-sage and a cable of inquiry was at once transmitted. All doubt, however, was dispelled shortly after 2 o'clock, when the fol-lowing cablegram was received:

Carlshad, June 30.—George W. Childs: Mr. Drexel died suddenly today of apoplexy. On June 16 he had a mild attack of pleurlsy from which he had quite recovered. He would not permit his family to be advised. Mr. Harges is expected here tomorrow. H. C. Haskins. Further than that the body of Mr. Drexel will be brought to Philadelphia for interment beside that of his wife, no arrangement has been made. The several banking houses will be kept open, it being impossible to close them, but only imperative business will be transacted.

Mr. Thomas of the Philadeldhia firm said this afternoon that it was Mr. Drexel's custom when abroad to map out in advance the route he intended to follow and the length of time he would spend at each place. In this manner the firm could tell on any given day just where Mr. Drexel would be. Mr. Drexel, continued Mr. Thomas, never deviated from the route so mapped out with out informing the firm of his intentions. Ir the present instance he had been scheduled to leave Carlsbad on June 27, and as no word had been received from him since that day it had been taken for granted that he had then departed.

It is stated at the office of Drexel & Co. that the death of Mr. Anthony J. Drexel will make no change whatever in the business of Drexel & Co.

Story of His Life.

Anthony Joseph Drexel was a son of Francis Martin Drexel, the founder of the banking firm of Drexel & Co. The elder Drexel was a portrait painter and came to America from the Austrian Tyrol in 1817 at the age of 25 years. For twenty years painting was his only business. He made portraits wherever he could find sitters, and even went so far as Chili and Peru in the practice of his profession. From this long journey he returned to his home in Philiadelphia and concluded to give up painting and start a bank with the little capital he had saved from his carnings. It is likely that he had brought back from South America more money than he had been accustomed to have, as he had had among his sitters many of the great men, including General Simon Boltvar. But notwithstanding these fees Mr. Drexel's friends in Philiadelphia thought that he was very unwise to go into the banking business with smell trades. Anthony Joseph Drexel was a son of Francis he was very unwise to go into the banking bus-ness with such inadequate capital and with no business experience. However, a little office was opened in 1837 in Third street in Philadelwas opened in 1837 in Third street in Philadelphia, and the now great firm of Drexel & Co. began its career. The business at first was naturally very small, and the son of the head of the firm, white waiting on customers, was in the habit of eating his cold dinner from a basket under the counter. When he was 13 years old, and four years after the banking business had been established, Mr. A. J. Drexel was taken into the service of the bank. This institution grew apace, as the founder of the house soon became well known for his irreproachable integrity. Long before he died, in 1863, he had become a millionaire, a distinction which not many men in America had achieved thirty come a millionaire, a distinction which not many men in America had achieved thirty years ago. When he died A. J. Drexel took charge of affairs. He had inherited his father's money-making faculties, and under his management the once modest institution grew to immense proportions. Besides the parent house in Philadelphia, there are now collateral or branch houses in the other great money centers—Drexel, Morgan & Co., in New York, Drexel, Harles & Co., in Paris, and J. S. Morgan & Co., in London. These great firms do a very large proportion of the international banking, and there are few great business undertaidings in which their co-operation is not sought. From his father Mr. Drexel also inherited artistic instincts, and he had for a long while been a most discriminating collector of maintains Rut. normed artistic instincts, and he had for a long while been a most discriminating col-lector of paintings. But, as was the case also with his brother, the late Joseph W. Drexel, his chief pleasure have always been derived from muste, of which he was passionately fond. He has always acted as though his great wealth con-ferred extent with a three properties. ferred certain obligations upon him, and has been prominent as a contributor to the philanthropic schemes which to him seen wise in their scope. His most intimate friend for many years has been Mr. George W. Childs with whom he was interested in many other charities.

PLUCKY MRS. KUHN

Struggles with a Sneak Thief Who Entered Her Home. Mrs N. A. Kuhn was the heroine of an exciting adventure with a sneak thief yes terday.

The Kuhns were moving from their late residence at the corner of Twenty-fifth and Marcy streets to 2536 St. Mary's avenue, and the house was wide open, after the fashion of houses about to be vacated, much of the time during the day. Late in the afternoon, while Mrs. Kuhn was superintending the starting of a furni-ture van from the back door, a smooth-faced young man, who was afterwards describe as being about 20 years of age, dressed in gray suit and wearing a straw hat, entered the front door and proceeded to go through the house after the most approved kleptomaniac style. He looked over a quantity o souvenir spoons and silverware, but decided that these goods were not available for his purpose, so he took $10.50 in cash, a diamond pin and a gold locket and started to walk out just as Mrs. Kuhn entered. That lady some one who had no business there and she asked him what he was doing "I came to see about that plumbing," he replied, walking toward her. Mrs. Kuhn informed him that he was not telling the truth and at once grappled with him to prevent his escape. The thief, how-ever, was too strong for her, and struggled o t of the front door and down to the gate with Mrs. Kuhn bravely clinging to him every step of the way, trying to ar rest his progress and calling loudly for help Arrived at the gate, he broke away, leaped over it, and, despite the efforts of a by-stander whom Mrs. Kuhn called to her assistance to catch him he succeeded in dodging into an alley and made his escape It seems that some of the neighbors saw the thief, accompanied by an old man who walked away after a short time, come up to the gate and enter the house, but, supposing them to be persons connected with the moving of the Kuhns' household goods, they paid no particular attention to them.

"The law can be repealed, Mr. President, if you will use your position for that purpose. By that, I mean for you to send for such men as Mr. Bland, Mr. Culberson and others who think as they do, who are democrats first and silver men afterward, and to them. and silver men afterward, and to them explain the urgent accessity for an immediate and unconditional repeal. They know that you have better opportunities of judg-ing of the situation of affairs and the state of the country at large than they have, who now are, to a large extent, influenced by the feeling existing in their own districts or states. They can be influenced by you. They look to you, the leader of the party, and they know it is your desire to simply do what is for the best interests of the country, and you will be able to tell them that you are in a position to know that the further continuation of the Sherman law on the statute books will result in a great financial

The president said that his utmost efforts were being used to bring about the repeal of the law by the coming congress. He added: "It is not any more a question of what Wall street in New York or State streat in Chicago marks but what or State street in Chicago wants, but what affects the masses of the people. They are suffering from the law. Business men, small and large, throughout the country are unable to sell their goods or realize sufficient money to properly conduct their business."

WANT THE LEGISLATURE CONVENED. Colorado Business Men Demand that the

Governor Call an Extra Session. DENVER, June 30. - A delegation, consisting of Hon. Thomas M. Patterson, ex-Senator H. A. W. Tabor, Hon. B. Clark Wheeler and T. C. Henry, representative business men of the state, called upon Governor Waite today and urged that he call a special session of the legislature for the purpose of passing an act staying proceedings for the collection of dobts. Similar legislation has been resorted to by Pennsylvania, illinois and other states in times of financial stringency. The governor expressed himself as unwilling to take action in the matter

favored it, which the governor thought was improbable, especially on the part of the banks, he would call the extra session, but this would take several days to accomplish. The Chamber of Commerce is directly opposed to the proposed extra session, assert-ing that it is entirely unnecessary, and that Colorado is in as good a financial condition as any other state in the union. This was the unanimous sentiment of that body at its meeting this afternoon, which was largely attended by prominent business men. Reso lutions were adopted denouncing the reports
