

WON BY GLADSTONE

Success Attends His Glorious Efforts in the House of Commons.

Closing Scenes in the Struggle for Ireland's Emancipation.

By a Majority of Thirty-Four the House
Puts Its Seal of Approval on It.

WILD CHEERS FOR THE GRAND OLD MAN

Crowds Pack the Streets and in Various Demonstrative Ways Give Vent to Their Feelings of Joyousness—
"God Save Ireland."

LONDON, Sept. 1.—Mr. Gladstone's long home rule fight in the House of Commons fr ended. The bill was passed at 1 o'clock this morning by a vote of 301 to 257. It was hurried to the House of Lords, which gave it the first reading and adjourned.

There was unusual enthusiasm on the route from Mr. Gladstone's residence to the House of Commons this afternoon. It was o'clock when Mr. Gladstone left his residence. This fact was announced by loud cheering from the throngs near the residence. Shortly afterwards his carriage appeared in sight of the crowds that lined the streets. Mr. Gladstone was accompanied by his wife. He wore a white azalea in the buttonhole of his coat. He was evidently much pleased with the heartiness of the greeting of the populace. The cheering was continued. Mr. Gladstone bowed constantly to the crowds on both sides of the street in acknowledgment of their plaudits. His reception was a complete ovation with a mark of dissent to mar it.

As Mr. Gladstone, with bare head, passed through the crowd and entered the house, it was noticed that his face was very pale. A number of Irish priests were prominent in the crowd in front of the house and lifted their hats as the prime minister passed them.

Cheered by His Followers.

The prime minister was loudly cheered by his followers as he entered the house and walked through the galleries also gave him a warm greeting.

Before the debate on the home rule bill could be opened, a long list of questions had to be answered.

Mr. Justin McCarthy, the Irish leader, resumed the debate on home rule, heartily cheered by his supporters.

Mr. Chamberlain followed Mr. McCarthy. He said the bill struck a deadly blow to the honor and interests of the country, but he would support it because of the courage, resolution, resources and eloquence of the prime minister.

Mr. Chamberlain then spoke cheerfully throughout his speech. When he had finished most of the members left the house for dinner. The people in the galleries were disappointed to find that they would miss the closing scenes of the debate.

Mr. James S. Wallace, advanced liberal, said that he had voted for the bill on a long struggle, but would be unable to support it tonight.

Mr. T. P. O'Connor was the next speaker. When Mr. Balfour refused to speak, the house was so overflowing, it spent more than an hour.

John Morley, chief secretary for Ireland, spoke next. He said that he had no fear of the verdict of the country.

Mr. J. P. Nolan, a Parnellite home ruler, then stated that he would support the special clauses of the bill, but had hard started when his voice was overcome by

The bill was then put on its third reading and was passed by a vote of 301 to 267.

herents, and the culmination of the work in the house was accompanied by rounds of frantic cheering from the galleries and upon the floor. A moment later Mr. Gladstone entered the House from the gallery and was greeted at that moment of his victory by renewed applause. Mr. Morley, who followed him, was also cheered. Mr. Gladstone received a free ovation as he left the house.

The scenes in front of the House after midnight were exciting. Fully 2,000 persons were jammed in the space in front of the House of Commons gates. There were many refreshments in the throng, and the sentimentality of the hour was for the most part forgotten.

By 12.30 the multitude had increased in size, so that the space from Downing street to the Palace yard was packed. The crowd was inclined to be hysterical and indulged in all sorts of horse play. It was also at points where the police as much trouble as possible by massing in the roadway, and it was with some difficulty that the mounted police cleared for carriages. The Irishmen in the crowd whistled away the time by alternating singing "God Save Ireland," cheering "Gladsstone" and shouting "come back to the house" and "no more business." When the house had passed the bill by a vote of 301 to 267, the crowd went wild. They cheered, shouted, sang, embraced one another and danced. The police were unable to show their appreciation of the House action.

Their Enthusiasm Alarmed the Police
The police were alarmed at the acts of the people and a cordon of bluecoats was formed with drawn up before the members' entrance.

The crowd surged around the cars and the police, and the carriage was driven to the house, and as each member of any of the delegation was recognized he was given the "hail."

Mr. Gladstone's carriage, containing the prime minister and his wife, emerged from the crowd, and the police immediately surrounded the carriage, but the crowd, when they learned who was in it, broke through the police line, and the police and the crowd stopped the carriage and held it while the prime minister and his wife were taken out to the house. The coachman, who was enabled to proceed after a few minutes delay by the police, turned back to their positions and started at the carriage which was again stopped at the corner of Downing street and Grosvenor street. The crowd, who were shouting "Here comes Hero Comes," Mr. Gladstone bowed and left to his enthusiastic admirers, and the police again cleared the way for the carriage. The police again cleared the way and the carriage was allowed to proceed to the prime minister's residence, and further stoppage. Mr. Gladstone handed his wife to a waiting car and then Mr. Gladstone into their home and returned to the carriage.

Unemployed Miners Moving.
SALT LAKE, Sept. 1.—[Special Telegram
The BEE.]—Railway officials say a w spread exodus of unemployed miners is tak place from Montana. They are headed Utah and California points.