MOSHER IN THE COUNTY JAIL. Sheriff Bennett Declares that the Incarcerated Financial Expert is Not Pampered.

The last issue of the Pappillon Times makes the following statement: "The Sheriff's office here and after, alleging that Bank Wrecker Mosher, under a five years sentence, was not confined in the Douglas county jail, is being treated like a prince.

In discussing the matter, the sheriff said: "One Mosher, a Lincoln banker, deliberately steals hundreds of thousands, and carries desolation to the doors of many homes."

A year later this same Mosher occupies private apartments in the same jail where a Sarty could be seen in a dismal cell. The tramp is fed on prison fare, and for recreation the tramp is sometimes allowed to stretch his legs in the corridors of the jail.

At the time of the trial, Mosher was driven about the streets in the sheriff's carriage, and it is said he is sometimes permitted to occupy the jail parlors.

When shown the statement of the Sarty county paper, the sheriff denounced it as being false in every particular. He said that during the day Mosher was occupied by Ed Koen. The bunk room which he slept in was, he said, the same as that of the other prisoners.

Mosher did not partake of the regular jail fare, which was due to the fact that he had his own money in buying his meals, which were sent to the jail by a private contractor.

This was a privilege that any prisoner who had money could enjoy. Continuing, the sheriff said that Mosher had never occupied the jail parlors, and he never occupied the jailer's apartments, as charged by the Pappillon Times, since he had been an inmate of the jail.

Colorado's New Liberal Party. Denver, Sept. 16.—The meeting for the purpose of organizing the liberal party took place here this morning and an address was made to the audience by J. Cook, jr., who talked for an hour and received much applause.

Several resolutions were passed, but it was decided not to nominate any ticket until all the other parties had nominated theirs.

The meeting was a large one, and a crowd present that had had expectations of the democratic convention voting it was the liberal party meeting.

The liberal party will be put in the field at the coming county election. They have not yet decided whether it will be a straight ticket or a ticket from the different tickets of the other parties, picking the best men therefrom.

END OF THE PUBLIC DOMAIN

Final Distribution Comes with the Settlement of the Cherokee Strip.

THE ECONOMIC AND INDUSTRIAL EFFECTS

The Significance of the Opening and Its Bearing on the Country's Future—Whence Shall the Land Farmer Form His Flock?

So keen is the desire for farms and homes, so scarce the available lands, so numerous the land-hungry, so sharp the competition for this remnant of a vast arable area, and so common the belief that the Cherokee Outlet affords the "last chance," that thousands of people have been upon the border many weary months awaiting the opening.

With the Cherokee Outlet divided among a fraction of the horde of home-seekers, says the New York Sun, there will come an end to the greatest and most peaceful movement of agricultural population the world has ever witnessed, and the future of American development will be hedged about by many of the limitations so long prevalent in other lands.

Heretofore when an American rural district became overworked the returned population could choose between the old farm, the new farm, the vacant western lands, whenever the difficulties attending the earning of a livelihood in the towns were increased to an unpleasant degree by reason of the older farmer's inability to displace, the discontented or displaced artisan and laborer could, and often did, resort to the public domain.

This recourse has had the effect of increasing the number of dairy and wheat farms; but when the public domain has been occupied, such a chance for the homeless will have forever disappeared and the territorial extension of the agricultural area will have come to an abrupt end.

End of Extension. From and after the occupation of the land now thrown open to settlement—amounting to some 4,000,000 acres, only two-thirds of which is in the area of fairly distributed rainfall—agriculture in the heart of the Cherokee Strip, Remember you can leave in the morning at 6 and be down there at 8:40 p. m. same day, 12 hours quicker than via any other line.

Table with columns for State, Cultivated Area, and Ratio of Increase. Rows include North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and British Columbia.

Marvellous Increase. A fact of tremendous significance brought out by this table, and probably the most significant phase of current economic conditions, is that in the five years ending with 1879 the cultivated area of the United States increased by 52,800,000 acres, the annual addition being 10,560,000 acres; whereas the additions made during the last four years average about 500,000 acres a year, being less than a twenty-first part of those of the earlier period.

That the population of the United States could not so clearly show the exhaustion of the arable lands as does the material added during the last four years when taken in connection with the fact that the ratio of would-be farmers to the total population is no less now than fifteen years since, when the additional cultivated area in any one of the cultivated portions of existing farms will necessarily be slow, as well as limited, for the rapid increase of the urban population necessitates great annual additions to the number of dairy and draught animals, and this necessary proportionate additions to meadow and pasture. So great have been the added requirements in this direction that the rich grain-growing areas of Illinois and of other central states are converted into pastures.

Whatever may prove to be the additions to the productive areas by bringing under the plow the unimproved lands of existing farms, the result, such as the founding of new homes as has obtained upon the public domain since the middle of the seventeenth century, will be a small fraction of the total increase of the most impressive phase of American development.

It is true that the public domain will be far less exhausted than the Cherokee Outlet, which has been occupied, but for other than pasturing purposes, the vacant lands are mostly valueless except as here and there may be found some small fraction of the arid area swampy and unproductive.

Such a small fraction of the arid area swampy and unproductive, and the rest of the arid area, which may be drained, involving a great time, labor and money, either process implies a scarcity of good lands capable of being reduced to cultivation at low rates, and the extent of irrigation at limited cost is so limited in quantity, as we have recently shown, as to warrant the assertion that the area which can be added, within the span of an era, under the productive expansion of this process, will be less than double the 3,631,000 acres under irrigation in 1880.

At the south, in Maine, in Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota, swamps of considerable extent will eventually be reclaimed; but, in themselves, such additions to the productive areas will afford conclusive evidence of the scarcity of cultivable lands, of the increasing demand for food, and of the increasing absence of any considerable areas which can be made productive at the cost which has attended the opening of farms upon the treeless plains.

The rapidity of the increase of population of national life, yet four years ago the gold seekers traversed an unbroken wilderness from the Mississippi to the western ocean. Since then Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, the two Dakotas, the mountains, the Pacific slope and the Pacific coast have been evolved from this wilderness and have aided immensely in quadrupling the productive area of the nation.

These states, with Iowa and Wisconsin, have added to the cultivated area more than 60,000,000 acres since 1865, which year marks the first effort to estimate officially the area under cultivation.

The rapidity with which the trans-Mississippi regions have been settled and made productive is as wonderful as it is unrivaled in the progress of industrial life elsewhere. The progress made there in the past few years, in the opening of the public domain and the sudden cessation of the nomadic life of the last decade (although more people than ever have, during the last eight years, been desirous of securing farms and homes upon the public domain) afford abundant proof of the now practically complete occupancy of the arable lands.

Unfortunately, census tabulations did not until 1880 and near the close of the period of greater development, furnish a measure of the increase of cultivated areas and the progress made in subduing the wilderness; nor do the census tabulations of 1880 help us, except inferentially, to determine the extent of increase of cultivated areas in the intermediate five-year periods, nor are there other data that are so prior to 1865. All that is known of the increase of the area under cultivation in the reports of the department of Agriculture for 1865 and subsequent years, and they, with the census figures of 1880 and 1890, enable us to measure the astounding strides made between 1865 and 1884, to see how sudden was the halt called when most of the lands of the Dakotas had been occupied, and how slow the development has been since the practical exhaustion of the raw material from which farms are made.

Agricultural Development. There is probably no more satisfactory or striking way of showing the progress of agricultural development in the period under review than by tabular statement of the area that follows given under cultivation, 1865, 1869, 1874, 1879, 1884, 1889 and 1893, by groups of states, the states being grouped with reference as much to their principal
