Will Make an Effort to Fix the Ex-Treasurer's Responsibility Today.

MUCH ABLE TALENT ON BOTH SIDES

Will Be One of the Most Closely Contested Cases in the History of the State - Review of the Affair.

LINCOLN, March 19 .- (Special to The Bee.)-In the supreme court tomorrow will be argued a matter of extreme importance to the people of Nebraska-important because it involves the money lost by the state by the failure of the Capital National bank, something like $236,000. This case is destined to become one of the notable ones in the legal annals, not only because of the large amount of money involved, but because of the imposing array of legal talent employed and the bitterness with which every effort of the attorneys representing the state is being contested.

State Treasurer Hill deposited large sums of money with the Capital National bank. His successor left it there under a worthless bond and the bank failed. The legislature placed $19,000 at the disposal of Governor Crounse to be used in recovering the money. Suit was first brought against ex-Treasurer Hill and his bondsmen in the district court at Omaha. Judge Davis dis-missed the case there for lack of jurisdiction and the supreme court affirmed his opinion. Two weeks ago Attorney General Hastings and Judge Wakeley, who has been employed as special counsel for the state, applied to the supreme court for a rule enabling them to bring the case against the ex-treasurer directly before the supreme The application will be orally argued tomorrow forencon. Both sides to the con-troversy filed briefs with the supreme court this afternoon, in which the main points of their arguments are clearly set forth.

The attorney general and his counsel lay down a number of propositions:

1. Section 2, article vi, of the constitution confers upon the supreme court original jurisdiction "in civil cases in which the state shall be a past." party." They argue that the legislature cannot take away nor impair this jurisdiction; that the legislature might properly have provided some method of procedure exercise of this jurisdiction, but that such action is not essential, as, by virtue of its inherent powers, the supreme court may exercise a jurisdiction granted by the con-stitution without legislative aid or action. 2. The proposition that the supreme court has the right to formulate such rules has long been settled by the supreme court of the United States in a case entirely analogous in principle. On this point a large umber of authorities are cited.

3. All courts of record have inherent power to make necessary rules for exercising this jurisdiction. Under this proposition it is argued that the Nebraska supreme court has power by express provision of section 898 of the statutes to make all necessary rules for exercising its jurisdiction, whether original or appellate; that it has already exercised this power in the very important matter of providing itself with juries in quo warranto and mandamus cases, and there can be no legical reason why, under the same power, the supreme court may not by rule provide for bringing parties before it for pleading, verdict and judgment in the case of an action instituted by the state.

The grant of jurisdiction in mandamus, que warrante and habeas corpus is in terms no more direct or positive than in civil cases in which the state shall be a party. The legislature properly assumed that nothing more was necessary. It is respectfully suggested that rules of similar import would readily accomplish the purpose in view.

In conclusion the attorneys for the state moved counsel to present the | night. matter at this time, it is not, we hope, im-

HILL'S CASE TO BE HEARD proper to say that the executive head of the state, charged by a special act of the legislature with its conduct and prosecution, believe that the importance of the controversyinvolving more than $250,000 of its moneyand the peculiar circumstances and sur-roundings of the case both justify and demand this effort to bring it at once into this supreme tribunal to the end that justice therein may be administered without denial or delay. They believe that the highest and best interests of the state demand it. They urge that the doubts, delays and uncertainties which attend the ordinary progress of a cause through the courts will be thus avoided, and should be. In this court the rights of neither plaintiff nor defendants will be imperiled by local interests or prejudice incident to a trial in the immediate place where the controversy arose. No fitter cause in all its aspects is likely to arise for the exercise of the original jurisdiction committed to this court, for wise purposes by the constitution which created it. The opposing brief is presented by T. M. Marquette, J. H. Ames, J. H. Broady, John C. Cowan, George E. Prichett and Griggs, Rinaker & Bibbs. It characterizes the application of the attorney general as "an appli-cation to make some new due process of law whereby the state, in suits on official bonds, can avoid all courts of general jurisdiction and commence actions in the court of last resort." The whole contention of the oppos-ing brief is that the supreme court has now power to formulate the rule applied for and that the legislature alone has the right to make such provision. The legal talent in-cluded in the defense lay down upon the provision of section 22, article vi, of the constitution, which says that "the state may sue and be sued, and the legislature shall prowide by law in what manner and in what court suits shall be brought." They argue that inasmuch as the legislature has never made such provision nothing can be done in the present case until the legislature acts.

BOUND TO WORK ANYWAY. Some new and almost unheard of compliations have arisen in the construction of the new water works system in Lincoln. since the work commenced, three weeks since, there have been many complaints to the effect that the foreman in charge of the works employed Russians to the exclusion of workmen of other nation-alities. Foreman Deffenbaugh promised to rectify the grievance when it was called to his attention. How well he succeeded was proven, or rather disproven, by subsequent events. On Wednesday morning he put twenty men at work on a comparatively short trench on P street. Of this number about one-half were Russians and the rest Americans. The Russians came along and insisted on going to work. They were told that there was not enough work for them on that particular trench. They insisted on working anyway and plied into the trench until eighty men were at work. The men were packed into the trench so closely that they greatly interfered with each other. but as a result the trench was completed before noon and everybody was out of a job.

Ordinarily the work would have lasted the twenty men two days. On Friday the same trouble occurred again at Ninth and H streets. Here the foreman proposed to employ twenty men, but the Russians went to work and when the count was made there were 119 of them. Then the foreman ordered all work stopped and is stopped yet. There is serious danger of a riot if the Russians continue to insist on employment for all of their number. There is not enough work for all of them and some must be idle a part of the time. They decline to remain idle and the men of other nationalities threaten to take the matter in their own hands and use force where

LINCOLN IN BRIEF. Officer Ide, who was summarily removed from the police force last Saturday, now ex-plains that his removal was occasioned by he fact that he was seen by another officer to enter a saloon at an unseemly hour be-tween midnight and morning in company with the barkeeper and two women. GOTHMAN'S SLAYER BREAKS OUT OF JAIL

Their Liberty at the Same Time by Sawing Through the Steel Bars of the Cage. FREMONT, Neb., March 19 .- (Special Telegram to The Bee.)-The county jail was broken open during the night and Charles Carleton, the murderer of August Gothman, and three others, including all the inmates except Marshall and Stewart, in for petty offenses and whose terms expire tomorrow, escaped. Carleton had been sentenced to hang on March 23, but the sentence had been stayed by the action of the supreme court. The others who have flown are the men Wichelow and Blake, put in for burglarizing a jewelry store at North Bend, but who had not yet been tried, and one Deshane, confined for bastardy.

The job was neatly and effectually done, hole being sawed in the steel cage about 10x14 inches, which gave them access to the corridors and direct access to the roof, through which an easy egress was effected. Once on the roof they had but to slide down the lightning rods and they were free.

Simultaneous with their escape two saddle horses belonging to Leonard Werz, on West Eighth street, disappeared, and, as they were traced to within a few blocks of the jail, believed that the prisoners were aided by outside parties, although the officers are of the impression that the horses were used as a blind. The two men who are still in the jail and were in the same cell with those who escaped say that the escape was effected at about 11 o'clock in the night after several accidents, including the breaking of a 2x4 scantling used as a collar beam to the roof, which made so much noise that they thought the game was up. But after a short delay the hole in the roof was made by cutting it out with jack knives. Blankets were so spread over the collar beams as to catch the plastering without

It is believed that the whole thing was planned by the man Blake, who was known as a jail breaker, having escaped from the jail at Lincoln. Sheriff Milliken telegraphed to neighboring towns and cities, and has offered a reward of $200 for the capture of Carleton Much criticism of the sheriff is indulged in that the watch had not been in a position to prevent so bold an effort. The sawing upon the grates, according to the prisoners remaining, had been going on about three weeks, and doubtless with tools either taken in by Blake or furnished from the outside. Another complaint is that Carleton was not in the murderer's cell according to the sentence of the court. The sheriff gives as a reason for this that no warmth could be provided for that cell and his course was prompted by humane in

FATHER OF THE FUGITIVE TALKS. Newt Carleton, father of the fugitive, brought in the stolen team this morning, stating that he caught it near his place, five miles west of the city this morning, and expressed great surprise when he ascertained that his son had broken jail. But he asserted to a friend that he was sixty miles away before daylight.

Additional facts are coming to light about the jail. Watchman Ford says that he had suspected that something was wrong from a whispered conversation among the prisoners and had notified the sheriff, who said that he would make a careful investigation of discovered them in an outhouse, where the the matter in the morning. It has also been ascertained by the remaining prisoners that would open Monday morning. The horse the hole in the roof was cut while the jailer returned alone. Search was made and was at supper, and everything was ready 'yesterday evening some 200 people gathered | ten in the party.

gation will be held. The crime for which Carleton was sentenced to death was committed June 7, 1893. August Gothman of South Omaha, his victim, had gone to Carleton's place, four miles west of Fremont, claiming to be in search of some mules that had strayed away, but really he was looking for his wife, who had left him and whom he believed to be living with Carleton. Two weeks previous Goth-man had come down with his family from Pierce and had camped at the Carleton place. He left his family there and went to Omaha himself. The family stayed for a few days and while there Charles Carleton became in-fatuated with Mrs. Gothman. She was about 18 or 20 years of age. Gothman was a German of about 45. After Gothman had gone on to Omaha Charles Carleton took Mrs. Gothman away and had her kept at a farm house several miles away for about a week. At the end of that time he took Mrs. Goth-man to Schuyler and they were married, she being married under the name of Minnie M. Oroulak. Carleton claimed he thought the woman was Gothman's daughter, as she had een there with Gothman's children, some of whom were about her age. On the day of the murder Carleton started to Fremont with a team and was going to work with a corn sheller. When within about a mile of Fremont be saw Gothman walking along the railroad track going west. He immediately turned off the direct road to Fremont, drove half a mile north, and back to his home as fast as he could make his team travel. On reaching home he had his father, with whom he was living, take the team and the woman and go away. As the father drove away he passed a hired man, who was working for the Carletons, about a mile and a half from the Carleton The elder Carleton told this man to go back to the house, as he was afraid that there would be trouble. This man returned to the house and found Carleton and Gotham sitting together talking. He had a short talk with Charles Carleton, and spoke of his having been sent back to prevent trouble. Carleton told him that there would be no trouble, and that if the old man did anything he would take care of him. This was the last time that Gothman was seen alive. Another neighbor, John Malcolm, had been at the house before the murder and also saw them talking peaceably together. After the shooting it is not known exactly what occurred. Carleton went from his place to different neighbors and told them all dif-ferent stories and then came into Fremout and gave himself up. While in Fremont he told several other different tales.

He said that a tramp whom he did not manded something to eat, and that in a quarrel he had shot him with the tramp's own gun. When he was on the stand Carlston tried unsuccessfully to explain all these stories on theories of accident and defense. There were three bullet wounds all in the head. The situation was such that accident could not have been the

The revolver belonged to the Carleton hired man and was kept in the house, so that unless one knew where it was it could not be found. The theory is that Carleton quietly walked in, got the weapon, and holding it to the old man's head, killed
