

EASIER At MORSE'S.

Easter time may be said to proclaim a new birth in all things. We instinctively realize that winter and its cold blasts have departed and nature awaking from her drowsy sleep.

So in the fabric world. The weaver and the printer speak the language of nature in bud and leaf and flowers. Long before robin and crocus reveal the presence of spring the southern cottons and silks and cosmopolitan wools speak the herald message, "Spring is coming."

Humanity awakens to new life at Easter and robes itself in new belongings. The Easter girl appears in all the splendor which art and her own good taste can suggest, in new gowns, ribbons, laces, hats and gloves.

The Easter young man tries to appear no less attractive in the newest conceits of the day. As if by common consent humanity takes a lesson from nature and catches the inspiration that at Easter "all things become new."

THE EASTER STORE.

So in the store life. The same spirit is abroad. Everywhere appear new fabrics for Easter wear. Our great store has caught the Easter message and trumpets forth in clarion notes, "The Easter goods are here."
