REBUKED THE GAPING CROWD

Judge Bradley Administers a Verbal Castigation to the Prurient Multitude.

BRECKINRIDGE IS RATHER WORRIED

He Contradicts Mrs. Blackburn, but Does So in a Very Guarded Manner—Judge Wilson's Searching Inquiry Meticulously Pursued.

WASHINGTON, April 4.—The indignation suffered by Representative Breckinridge at the hands of Judge J. W. Wilson regarding the testimony of Mrs. Governor Blackburn would be the talk of the city tonight but for the remarks from Judge Bradley, which entirely destroyed the day's proceedings and have obscured all other passing features of the case. For days past, since the case reached the zenith of its sensationalism, crowds of men, boys and women, many of them well dressed and respectable of appearance, have thronged the court house corridors, the sidewalks, even the street in front of the offices of the attorneys, at the hour for adjournment, waiting for the principal to appear, shouting for ventriloquist, bandying personal comments and making things so generally disagreeable that the objects of their attention have been driven to make their escape through side doors, adopting various maneuvers to avoid the unpleasant notoriety. Judge Bradley had meantime been smothering a growing feeling of disgust. Tonight his emotion passed the safety point, and he gave some of the people such a pointed tongue-lashing as has rarely been heard in the court room. After contrarily to hold the court room spectators in check, he told them that their conduct was characterized by indecency; that they reminded him of buzzards around carrion and other things not pleasant for the crowd.

Colonel Breckinridge testified that Mrs. Blackburn's description of nearly every one of the material occurrences when their paths crossed was wrong, but qualified his denials by the statement that he had confused dates and places; had put constructions not intended upon his utterances; had attributed to Mrs. Blackburn's words, Pollard, but asserted as a saving clause that she had no doubt honestly endeavored to give her recollection of events. Tomorrow the defense will close their case. The plaintiff has several witnesses in town for rebuttal. Mrs. McClellan Brown of Cincinnati, the wife of the former principal of the Western Institute, registered at the Riggs house yesterday. Other Kentucky witnesses who are stopping at the same place are G. H. Schneider, Fremont; Miss Pettis, Stella; H. B. Knowlton and wife, Fremont; H. Brass, Lincoln; F. M. Polk, Lincoln.

lection of Mrs. Blackburn upon that point differed as to the meaning of my words." "And you went to see Mrs. Blackburn again alone?" "I went to see her several times afterwards." "And you caressed the plaintiff in her presence, a part of that description?" "I did not caress the plaintiff. I will explain that."

"But what passed there for the purpose of carrying out the deception?" "Indubitably." In further cross-examination Mr. Wilson brought out the fact that in filling out the certificate of marriage, Mr. Wilson, as Colonel Breckinridge it was made to appear that that marriage was the colonel's second, whereas it was really his third. Colonel Breckinridge could not recall that at that time he had sent certain telegrams to Mrs. Blackburn.

Wilson then read the direct testimony of the colonel regarding the first interview with Mrs. Blackburn, upon which the colonel commented that he had told the whole truth. Mrs. Blackburn's testimony was read and Mr. Wilson asked him if it had occurred, which the colonel replied that he had recalled it differently.

"Do you deny," asked Mr. Wilson, "that you said to Mrs. Blackburn, 'I intend to marry this young woman when a sufficient time has elapsed after the death of my wife'?" "My recollection is that nothing was said about my wife's death," said Mrs. Blackburn. "I am sure I never said such a thing."

All of Mrs. Blackburn's statements being read, the witness testified that she had no recollection of that, he said of Mrs. Blackburn that on his second visit he had said that he noticed she was much shocked by the announcement of his engagement.

"I am sure I have no recollection of that," he said when confronted with Mrs. Blackburn's statement that he was giving a poor return for all the love she had given him. "Such a scene did happen, and it was a superb piece of acting."

Much more of the same kind of colloquy between the witness and the attorney on the one hand and effort to elicit admission that there had been a promise of marriage, and on the other, a vehement denial that there had been any such promise, was a reiteration of the oft-repeated statement that Mrs. Blackburn's evidence was based upon a conversation with the witness near the Catholic institution, "As a woman in her condition and a man supping himself to be the author of her condition would not."

"Do you wish to be understood as saying you supported her in whole or in part during the two years of her stay at the academy of the Holy Cross on Massachusetts avenue?" "It was a question to which the colonel responded: 'I would not wish to be understood as saying I supported her if I could avoid it, but as a matter of fact my contributions to her were not lessened. They were irregular amounts, and I helped to pay her expenses.'"

Referring to five notes of $100 drawn by the plaintiff and endorsed by the defendant late in 1892 to pay Miss Pollard's expenses at the academy, the witness said he did not know the defendant at that time, but that he had been told by the defendant that she had been in her condition and a man supping himself to be the author of her condition would not."

recollection that it happened in a different way," was the final answer and later the witness said: "Mrs. Blackburn puts her own construction on my words," in exclaiming on the point to see her several times afterwards.

Reading to the testimony of Mrs. Blackburn that she had told her that he had never paid the slightest attention to Mrs. Wilson but to her mother, the witness was engaged to her wife familiarly by family with the idea of his remarriage, and when congress adjourned, he was going home to make arrangements for his marriage. Mr. Wilson asked for the witness' recollection on that point.

"That was never said by me, according to my recollection, and part of it was never said at all," was the answer. "Congress had already adjourned, so that shows that Mrs. Blackburn's conversation, although she honestly endeavors to repeat them."
