Judge Macy Gives an Opinion of Much Interest to Property Owners.

LEGALITY OF SCHOOL TAX IN QUESTION

Case Involves the Levy of 1893 and Was Once Passed on by Judge Deemer—His Decision is Now Considerably Modified.

An important decision was rendered by Judge Macy last Monday in the district court at Avoca. It was in the case of Jenks against the town of Avoca, the plaintiff seeking to enjoin W. B. Reed, the county treasurer, from collecting a school tax of 1 1/2 mills on account of the illegality in the manner of making the levy.

The points at issue were the same as those involved in the case in which the Council Bluffs school district was interested a little over a year ago. The board of directors having neglected to certify the levy to the Board of Supervisors until after the third Monday in May, the date fixed by law. Notwithstanding the illegality, the supervisors went on with the levy and the treasurer collected the first half before the Council Bluffs difficulty brought to the notice of some of the property owners the fact that there was a chance to get their money back. Several suits were brought. One of these cases was tried before Judge Deemer, who rendered a decision granting the injunction to restrain collection of the tax, and also gave the property owners the money they had already paid in on the tax levy. Judge Macy now comes in with a decision in which he takes issue with Judge Deemer, holding that an injunction will hold only to the half of the tax that did not yet come in.

Federal Court. Chris Hansen, who was found guilty of stealing $5 from a letter in the postoffice at Poplar, Ia., was brought in for sentence yesterday in federal court. He was given fifteen months in the penitentiary at Fort Madison by Judge Woolson. Since Hansen stole the money and ran off to California to spend it with his wife and three small children he was kept in the poor house. They came from there long enough to watch the husband and father have his trial, but will now have to go back again.

Sam Maynard was found guilty of bootlegging. Frank Bristow, for the same offense, was sentenced to pay a fine of $200 and spend 100 days in jail. Andrew Seibert was acquitted. Lee McCormick was found guilty and given $100 and thirty days, but the judge gave orders that the mittimus should not issue until August 1, and that, if the costs should be paid by the defendant by that time the balance of the sentence should stand suspended pending good behavior. Jim Clifford of Shenandoah, an old, gray-headed man, confessed that he had been convicted of the crime of bootlegging five years ago, when Judge Love was presiding over the court, but his experience had not done him much good. He claimed to be quit drinking and to have turned over a new leaf, and, as some of his influential friends had been interested for him with the judge, the sentence of $500 fine and 120 days imprisonment was suspended during good behavior.

A demurrer on the part of the defendant in the case of Hollard against the World Publishing company was overruled by Judge Woolson. The hearing of evidence will commence this morning.

TO REVISE IOWA'S LAWS

Code Commission Clothed with Unlimited Power and Discretion.

ANTI-MONOPOLS SOMEWHAT AGITATED BY IT

Rush of Corporation Attorneys to Secure Control of the Commission Gives Rise to Apprehension for the Railroad Statutes.

DES MOINES, April 4.—(Special to The Bee.)—There is just now some speculation in the minds of the members as to what they did when they voted for the bill constituting the commission to codify the laws of the state. It is shrewdly suspected that the ardent champions of the move had in view an end that was not wholly disclosed in the context of the law. The bill provides for a commission of five, which shall be legislature, governor and supreme court all in one. Two of the five are to be chosen by the house, one by the senate and two by the supreme court. Its members are to begin work not later than the 1st of September next and are to receive $10 per day and actual expenses while engaged in the work. The report is to be made to the Twenty-sixth general assembly, and two copies of the report are to be furnished members of the assembly.

Section 4 of the bill provides: "Said commission shall carefully review and codify the laws of this state, and shall rewrite the same and divide them into appropriate parts and arrange them under proper titles, chapters, sections and articles. Said commission shall have power to transcribe words and sentences, arrange the same in sections, paragraphs and number them, change the phraseology and make any and all alterations necessary to improve systemically the laws, and to make the laws clear and intelligible. They shall omit from said revision all laws of a temporary character, those relating to the apportionment of the state into congressional, judicial, senatorial and representative districts, and all references to decisions, notes or their own report of that or any former revision committee. The scope of this commission of revision is clearly shown in this section. That it is not to be confined to the mere correction of errors is also clear. If it is not, the struggle made by the corporations, especially the railroad, to secure friendly attorneys on the commission ought to indicate what its end is. Hon. J. M. Clain, of Iowa City, author of "McClain's Code," was named by the senate without opposition. In the senate, the attorney general, was chosen as one, but his candidacy attracted intense opposition from railroad attorneys of all sorts. J. E. Hlyte leading the onslaught. The democrats chose a railroad attorney, named Baker as their member of the commission. Now the supreme court is set to appoint two railroad lawyers to the commission. It seems clear that the emancipation of anti-monopoly laws is the object chiefly sought in the new codification.

GIST OF THE DAILY CHIEF. The lower house today got into a parliamentary tangle which consumed nearly the entire session over an attempt by Chapman of Woodbury to substitute a bill to divide Woodbury county into two judicial districts and authorize the holding of court at Corning for another bill of a totally different nature by the same author, which was reached in regular order. The session became arduous and points of order and appeals from the decision of the speaker followed. The session was interrupted with a lively passage at arms between Byers, Trewin, Dussell and other members. The speaker will properly to non-resident aliens, and refused to concur with the senate in increasing the appropriation for the state dairy commission from $6,000 to twice that sum. A senate majority of 15-10 voted to pass a bill requiring the stockholders of private and savings banks to make up any losses in paying the claims.

The chances are that the house will recede from its amendment, as the momentum existing laws will be the point selected by the senate unless that body yields to the judgment of the house. The senate passed a bill granting the cities of the second class and to incorporated towns, on petition of a majority of property owners, the right to elect assessors and drains along streets and alleys at an expense not to exceed $1,000 from the city or town treasury; also a bill requiring the stockholders of private and savings banks to make up any losses in paying the claims.

Both houses met in the afternoon in joint session to receive the report of George A. Jones of Dubuque, the first United States senator from Iowa. Appropriate addresses of welcome were made by President Dungan and Speaker Stone of the house. The report of Jones was read and he was received with a fitting respect. The life and public services of General Jones were briefly related by General Jones and Secretary of State McFarland and Governor Jackson. The remarks of Governor Jackson, which were the most interesting of the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

FOR A CRUEL MURDER. Alleged Slayers of an Old Man On Trial at Creston. CRESTON, Ia., April 4.—(Special Telegram to The Bee.)—A jury was empaneled in the Goodale murder trial this afternoon. Dell Balderson and Sam Kidd, the men charged with the crime, pleaded not guilty. The defense will endeavor to destroy the confidence of the jury in which he implicates Kidd, by introducing testimony of his mental weakness. They will also endeavor to prove that Balderson implicated himself in other crimes in which it is known he had no hand. The trial will last several days.

The crime was one of the most brutal murders in the annals of the state's criminal record. It occurred at a small country farm house near Aton, G. G. Goodale, the victim, an old man, was an agreeable old gentleman and respected in the community. Among those who made calls on Goodale were Balderson and Kidd, who were in the neighborhood that Mr. Goodale had considerable money secreted about the place. The story gaining credence from the fact that the old gentleman had lost some money in the Tingley bank failure, and that he had withdrawn his deposits from other banks. It is evident these reports reached the ears of Balderson and Kidd and they decided to rob the old gentleman. In Balderson's confession, which he afterward made, he tells of the horrible crime as follows:

"Sunday afternoon, January 21, 1891, Kidd came over to the home of A. Balderson, where I was stopping, and together we went to the Goodale house. We had not decided on the manner of getting rid of the old man until we reached the house, and then Kidd told me to hit the old man first, and he would finish him, at the same time handing me a hatchet. When we entered the house Goodale was sitting at the table eating his dinner. He said: 'Hello, boys,' and made an effort to get up when I struck him on the head with the hatchet and he fell. Kidd then stepped out of the house while Kidd rifled the old man's pockets. He got about $100 in money out of his pocket and pocket book, but did not give me any of it. He promised to divide with me, but did not. After the murder we left the house and went to our home in Creston. I have not seen him since, but I am under arrest for murder."

Balderson has subsequently made several varying statements about the crime, at times denying that he had any hand in the affair. His statement of the killing is thought to be partially correct. When Goodale was found an examination proved that he had fourteen wounds on the head and two on the neck. From this it is evident that he was struck repeatedly by the murderers, while Balderson claims to have only struck him once.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, Ia., Nov. 18, 1893.—The Foster Manufacturing Company: Dear Sirs—My little boy, while at play, was struck by a playmate, causing a gash in which you could lay your little finger. After checking the profuse hemorrhage your Mecca Compound was applied immediately to my lad, with the result that he was suffering great pain and could not be appeased until he dried his tears, and, climbing into my lap, went to sleep. The next morning an examination of the wound revealed, instead of an ugly gash and swollen forehead, a red, raw, and a scab less than half an inch in height. We were immediately striving to cure with other mixtures, and in a very short time they were well. It is needless for me to state that a jar of Mecca Compound will ever find a place in my home.
