must submit their working plans to the got ernment for approval, thus preventing im-provident and wasteful methods.

The several states differ in their laws re-garding forest property. Of the private for-ests 70 per cent are without any control whatever, while 30 per cent are subject to supervision, so far as clearing and devasta-supervision, so far as clearing and devasta-tion are concerned. The tendency on the part of the govern-ment has been rather toward persuasive measures. Thus, in addition to buying up, or acquiring by exchange, and reforesting waste lands-some 300,000 acres have been so reforested during the last twenty-five years-the government gives assistance to private owners in reforesting their waste land. During the last ten years $300,000 was granted in this way. In Austria, by a law adopted in 1852, not only are the state forests (comprising less than 30 per cent of the total forest area; rationally managed, and the management of the communal forests (nearly 40 per cent) officially supervised, but private owners (holding about 32 per cent)) are prevented from devastating their forest property to the detriment of adjoiners. No clearing for agricultural use can be made without the consent of the district authorities, from which, however, an appeal to a civil judge is possible, who adjusts the conflict of in-terests.

teen years ago, which led to the law of 1880, giving the state control of private forest property as in Austria. Under a law adopted in Italy in 1888 the Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with the Department of Public Works and in consultation with the forestal committee of the province and the respective owners, is to designate the territery which for public reasons must be reforested under govern-mental control. In Russia, until lately, liberty to cut, burn, destroy and devastate was unre-stricted; but in 1888 a comprehensive and a well-considered law cut off, so far as this can be done on paper, this liberty of van-dalism. For autocratic Russia this law is rather timid, and is in the nature of a
