in a certain degree of popular distrust. He referred to a number of statements, among them the epitaph written by Dr. Johnson, o "God works wonders now and then;

Here lies a lawyer, an honest man." in order to show that the profession of law had been held in distrust, and that this dis-trust has not wholly passed away to this

He said: "I imagine this popular distrust arises from various reasons. First and chiefly from the fact that there are some disreputable lawyers. But let the profession that is blameless cast the first stone; judged that is Diameters cast one may not any pro-by this standard any other profession would have to be condemned. Another reason ac-counting for this condemnation is the fact that people do not generally understand the counting for this condemnation is the fact that people do not generally understand the principles of justice; they forget that even a rogue has certain rights and is entitled to the defense of those rights, that a man may be a good man and yet defend a had man in his legal and moral rights. Between the two externess of payer pleading the case of in his legal and moral rights. Between the two extremes of never pleading the case of a bad man, and the saving of your client at all hazards, there is a golden rule that the veriest villain on earth is entitled to a fair trial. The profession is also condemned be-cause they make men right their wrongs. As long as lawyers arrest men in their course of trime and bring them to justice there will be a cortain class of people who will affect a certain class of people who will affect to despise the profession. "But while it is true that there has seem ingly been a popular distrust of the legal profession, there has also been a very popu-lar trust of them. There is no class of men so thoroughly and universally trusted as the lawyers. They are more trusted than the lawyers. They are into the values, or even the preachers. And the glory of the profession is that they seldom ever betray a trust. Furthermore we are all more or less dependent upon the lawyers. The average citizen knows no more about law than he does about medicine, and the lawyer is just as great a necessity as the physician for as human society becomes more complicated the services of the lawyer become

Mr. Patterson then spoke briefly of the motives to entering the law, giving as the prime motives the opportunities for acquir-ing worldly wealth and of entering a wideopen door of usefulness. "If a man wants to live for the good he can do and has a talent for the law he can there find ample opportunity for the exercise of his talents for the benefit of his fellow men and the glory of God. While individual lawyers have betrayed the rights of the people, yet the profession as such has always been, and believe always will be, the champion of these rights.

As to the qualifications of the lawyer the speaker said that he must first be a man of sterling principles, able to withstand great temptations. "No other man has com-mitted to him without security such vas trusts as has the lawyer, and there is, too, no class of men of whom the majority of people are more suspicious than the lawyers. Integrity therefore becomes an essential qualification for success in this profession. Every trust committed to the hands of a lawyer should be sacredly and scrupilously cared for. But I would not have a lawyer violate Solomon's maxim of 'Be thou not righteous overmuch." The lawyer who does violate this maxim is a rare bird. But ever criminal is entitled to an honest defense, and every man ought to be considered innocent until proven guilty. "The young person entering the legal pro-fession must be self-reliant. Archimedes said, 'Give me a standing place and I will move the world.' Goethe said, 'Make good thy standing place and move the world. Goethe was right, and the man who succeeds in the law must above all others prove his right to a place. The law is a profession in which pre-eminently a man must be self reliant, and hence it is that so many have failed. The legal bent of mind is not abun dant. The lawyer must needs be a man of great determination. The fond father who asked the advice of a noted lawyer as to the advisability of having his son enter the legal profession had put to him the real test when the question was asked, 'Can your son eat sawdust without butter?' "A lawyer must have pluck. There is no success in any place without toil, and this is pre-eminently true of the legal profesis pre-eminency the of the legal proves sion. There never was a heaven-born law-yer, but if the young man have some of the pluck of Demosthenes he may have some of his success. Then, too, the study of the masters is another condition of success. If the observance of a work of art of an inferior artist would damage the talent of an artist how must the study of a master aid and improve! 'A candidate for the bar must also be thorough: concentration is absolutely neces sary, dilgence is fundamental and hearti-ness is absolutely essential. The legal profession holds out no in-ducements for the slipshod man. If a man depends upon his memory for his wit and upon his imagination for his facts he will not be likely to get the verdict. "There is no profession that needs the grace of God more than the legal profession. While many men seek the services of the lawyer from right motives and in right causes, others seek him in wrong motives and in unjust causes. In a measure the sense of justice is more largely developed in the legal profession than in any other class of men, but the temptations are so great that many men of eminent ability have gone down before them as the tent goes down before the storm. Christ ought to be the lawyer's best friend. No one has so exalted the law as has Jesus. No one has down before the storm. Christ ough entered such a defense of justice as has He He died in order that God might be just, and yet the justifier of lost man. Let me point and all to Christ, the soul's ad-'If any man sin he has an advocate vocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous Though you may never find it necessary to enter a court on earth, you will not escape the high court of heaven. If you have a case on earth involving a few dollars you will not attempt to defend it yourself, you will not attempt to defend it yourself, you will seek the services of some competent attorney. Will you risk the existence of your immortal soul? Will you dare to ap-pear before the great judgment bar of God without having enlisted the services of the soul's great advocate? He is the very best advocate you could have, because of His love and because of the plea He enters. Even and because of the plea He enters. Even though conscience, the law, the holy scrip-tures, the holy spirit, may enter their testimony against you, declaring that your con-demnation is just, yet the Great Advocate will say that He has paid the debt and there is now therefore no condemnation to those who are in Jesus Christ."

TO A NEW FIELD.

Rev. Patterson Bids Adieu to the Members of His Church.

The farewell address of Rev. J. M. Patter son, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of this city, was delivered to the congregation yesterday morning. After the conclusion of the regular morning exercises Mr. Patterson said:

"Dearly Beloved in the Lord: Only about one year ago I came to this city to become your pastor. I now ask to be released. I came with the full intention and the deep desire of spending many years and the best years of my life in giving yon the best pervice of which I was capable. Prior to accepting your call I had insisted upon the provision of what seemed to me the essential temporal conditions of success. I could not afford, either for my Master's make or for my own, to enter a field where the conditions of successful work were wantthe continions of successful work were wanted ing. These conditions you prunised to es-tablish. If ever a man entered a new field af labor from a sense of duty, it was thus that I came to you.
