I had utterly forgotten a large payment burg museum. Another chain was placed as an obstruction at Fort Montgomery, four made me at Milwaukee on that very mornmiles below West Point, which the British destroyed after capturing the fort on the morning of October 7, 1777. This chain, with the boom, cost $250,000, and its loss was a serious blow to the Continental army. On the southwest corner of Trophy Point are five large brass guns which were cap-tured at Contreras and Chapultepee in torial at Contreras and Chapultepee in 1847. They were manufactured in Southamp-ton. England, in 1842, by J. J. Wolf. The history of their capture is interesting. The night previous to the battle of Contre-ras men and officers stood knee deep in mud and water with the rain pouring in tor-rents upon them until the gray dawn saw them marching to attack the Mexican army, At 3 o'clock on the morning of August 20 Cadwallader's, Riley's and Dunmick's brigades, under command of General Smith, attacked the enemy. Riley stormed the intrenchments from the rear, and in fifteen minutes his colors were flying over the Mex-ican works. In this battle 700 of the enemy were killed and S18 men were taken pris-oners, among whom were four generals and fifty-eight other officers. Twenty-two brass cannon were also captured. On the south side a row of twenty guns of various sizes forms an interesting collec-tion. Several of them were captured at Resaca de la Palma May 9, 1846. Two bronze guns, on which are elaborately carved the British arms, bear the inscription, "Cap-tured at Stony Point, July 17, 1779." One bears the 'nscription: Gyges Ultima Ratio Department Louis Charts Regum-Louis Charles de Bourbon, Comte d'Eu Duc d'Aumale." Others were cap-tured at Palo Alto, Resaca, Montercy, Molino, Churubusco, Mesaca, subnorty, Mo-lino, Churubusco, Mexico, Ringgold, Buena Vista and Vera Cruz. The forty-two guns lying on the east side of Trophy Point were captured in the Mexican war. Four large guns captured from the confederates in 1864 The largest gun on Trophy Point is mounted in the center of the collection. Its huge muzzle sweeps the river, and can be turned so as to cover either shore. It was cast in the foundry of Sir William Arm-strong at Newcastle-on-Tyne, for the con-federate government, and weighs 15,737 pounds. The date on the carriage is 1864 and the number 1,207. The story of its cap-ture is as follows: ture is as follows: General Terry, with a force of 8,000 men, left Fort Monroe January 6, 1865. The transports reached Beaufort on the 8th, and, under protection of Admiral Porter's fleet, landed on Federal Point on the morning of the 13th. The attack on Fort Fisher began on the 15th. Every inch of ground was contested with desperation. The union fleet shelled the fort, and the land forces gained the parapets, driving back the con-federates to the remaining traverses. These were captured about 9 o'clock in the eyening, and a few millutes later Battery Buchanan, to which the survivora of the garrison had fied, fell into the hands of the unionists, fied, fell into the hands of the unionists, Among the seveny-five guns captured at Fort Fisher was the large Armstrong gun, which rises like a giant among its fellows on Trophy Point. The garrison at the time of the assault on Fort Fisher numbered 2,300 mea; 1,971 men and 115 officers were cap-tured, the rest being killed or wounded. The union loss was about 1,000. Admiral Porter excepted of it afterwards that Fart Fisher remarked of it afterwards that Fort Fisher was stronger than the Malakoff tower, which defied, the combined power of France and England for so many years. Twenty-three brass guns and two mortars captured in Mexico face the north. A num-ber of iron guns captured in the civil war are also lined up here. Artistically grouped, pyramidal-shaped heaps of balls and shells are placed at intervals between. A little to the north of Trophy Point is the new battle monument, which will be unveiled in June It is the largest stone shaft in the United States. The post chapel and Fort Clinton contain many valuable trophies captured from the English and Mexicans. When the new Cullom Memorial building is finished. all of these scattered trophies will be placed in its museum.

This was obviously intended to give the im-pression that he had "broken" a pair, upon which he had opened the "jack pot," and that he was now drawing to a flush or straight straight.

Realizing that I possibly had "threes" to heat at No. 2 and a "straight" or "flush" at No. 4, I made "a freak draw." The reason I preferred to "stay" to the jacks rather than to the kings was that I had an intuitive sus-These inexplicable impressions that all card players have are very curious psychological phenomena, but every man who plays poker understands how strong is their influence.

I picked up my three cards and discovered to my surprise that two of them were jacks and the third one was a king. That disclos-ure gave me a little start, because it was obvious to me that I would have a full hand in any event-that is, with Whitney driven out of the game and exactly two men to take cards before me! So strong was the effect of a king or jack with great caution. But with fours it was different! There was nothing whatever to indicate a suspicion of any such strength around the table. I tried to look then I raised it to the limit; I heard it raise I again; I saw the original opener "lift" it once more, with a remark about "over-playing a high flush."

I am not sure whether I first suggested the removal of the limit, or whether the the removal of the vanced by the man on the left of me. I began to feel the inde-scribable passion of the gaming table. The prospect of winning the money of my com-panions was so promising that all the mean and avaricious traits of my character de-veloped, and I became another and a differ-ent man-bereft of human sympathy, domihat a solely by a selfishness that I never had known before.

Professional gambiers will tell you that the percentage in their favor in any of the mechanical games is very triffing. They will convice you that the man who plays faro and bets only on the case cards-that is to say, on the last king, or ace, or dence in the dealer's box after the other three have been withdrawn-has an exactly even chance with the establishment. Abstractly that is true, and as gamblers are men of abstraction they cannot be charged with fasehood. But above and beyond all this percentage are uncalculated factors that

ing. Wh tention, the man on my right, who seemed very nearly out of money, "saw" the thous-and dollar raise and added $250 thereto.

This was an eye-opener to me. It showed that this player was in the possession of the supposed amount of my stake. I knew exactly what to expect next, and it came like a volley from a mitrailleuse.

With a gleam of triumph in his eye, Num-er Four "saw" the $260 "raise" and added: ber Four "I lift it a thousand."

Here was where the catastrophe was to have occurred! The player on my left was obviously "broken," and showed every indi-cation of an intention to "lay down" his cards. My friend Whitney was aghast-fully realizing that I had been "sawbucked" by the two men acting in collusion. He was frantically going through his clothes in the hope of being able to lend me enough money to "call" for the third time. But I could see by his face that he was hopeless. I detected a gleam of sarcastic mirth on the face of the dealer. It was only by an effort that I swallowed the lump in my throat, looked at my cards again, and, with a sigh that would have broken the heart of my wife, I counted out $1,260 and raised the pot $2,000 in "long green."

S2,000 in "long green." Consternation appeared on the faces of my companions. The two players against me, in their dismay, cast off the mask. Number Two asked his colleague to lend him enough money to "call" me. He appealed in vain to Whitney, showing him his hand, which contained four aces. He was finally compelled to throw down his hand.

Number Four was in dismay. He asked me to reduce my bet to $500-all the money he had-but I refused to do so. Asking Whitney to take out his watch, demanded to know what my only remaining antagonist intended to do. He asked to leave the room for fifteen minutes, in which to secure more 'noney. "Never!" said I.

At a motion from me Whitney rose and locked the door and put the key in his pocket. I was well armed. I believed that Whitney also was, and I was determined to make the fight of my life for the possession of that money. I had detected, as I believed, a conspiracy to rob me, and I was not dis posed to concede a single point. At the end of five minutes the gambler tossed his hand into the center of the table and got his feet. As he did so we all rose. He bowed to me and said, with a calmness that marked him as a professional gamester: "It's a dead 'freeze out;" but your nerve and your money win." He had laid down a "straight flush!"

Not long ago, upon a visit to ben-ver, she proudly brough her young daughter in to see an old friend. "What have you called your daughter?" queried the visitor.
