Listless Young Man Stops a The New York Tribune prints a story f a "very listless young man" who was walking up Fifth avenue the other evening stylishly dressed, and to all appearance chiefly concerned to keep his patent leather shoes out of the puddles at the crossings. After his silk hat, his extremely long "paddeck" coat and his patent leather shoes, his chief characteristic was his listless manner aforesaid. But then, as was long ago remarked, you cannot tell all about a cat by ts outward appearance. Suddenly there was a great outcry. A cab horse was coming down the avenue on the run, while the driver clung desperately to his box and yelled like a Comanche Indian. Two or three men ran out into the street, waved their arms wildly in front of the horse and then scurried back to the sidewalk while the horse, still more frightened, only ncreased his pace. The young man in the long coat stepped to the curbstone and looked calmly at the run-away. Evidently it was none of his busi-Of a sudden, however, a change came him. When the horse had nearly reached him his form straightened up, and the next moment he swing out into the muddy street, and running like a deer, was soon at the horse's head soon at the horse's head.

For a few seconds the two ran neck and neck. Then the young man's arm shot out and he had the plunging animal by the bit. As he ran he drew the horse's head down

The crowd pushed into the street and an impulsive old gentleman threw open the door of the cab. "Here," cried the excited old gentleman in an admiring voice, "here is the young man to whom you owe your life." The man began to express his gratitude, but his deliverer interrupted him.

"Oh." said he, almost with a drawi, "ne thanks are necessary. It's a very easy mat-ter to stop a runaway horse."

Then he stooped and turned up his trous-ers, and with a bow to the man he had. saved he regained the sidewalk and resumed his saunter.

A young and very aspiring girl was speak-ing of her literary attempts to an older writer. She was especially anxious to know what color of ink she should use, and whether to write on ruled or whether to write on ruled. whether to write on ruled or unruled paper. After these points were settled she drew a sigh of satisfaction. "Now," she said, "I feel sure I can do

A GAGE OF LOVE.

New York Times.

Richard Bulkley, M. D., or, as he was generally known in his native town of Pergamos, "young Mr. Dick," was a skillful and successful physician, well liked and respected by his fellow citizens, with one exception; but oh, what a mighty test of the rule that exception was!

"Dr. Dick" was tall, slender, erect and replete with nervous energy. His face was pleasant and sympathetic, and his brown eyes more expressive than ingenuous, for they were near-sighted. In the sick room he was intent and solicitous, like a thoroughbred hound on the scent, but in his recreations he was apt to be vague and disraught, as if his mental acuteness also required the adjustment of his professional spectacles. Probably the amiable failings resulting from this absence of mind were more potent aids to his popularity than his ability could have been had it been aggressive, for we laugh most with the friend at hom we oftenest laugh. Outside of such trivial eccentricities "Dr.

Dick" had no detriments. He was a back-elor, alone in the world, unrestrained by either the demands or the jealousies of rela-tives and hampered by neither debt nor vice. His future was a broad, rich meadow, growing more expansive and fertile as he advanced. What wonder that many an anxious matron of Pergamos believed that she possessed just the one ewe lamb fitted to gambol on such a green?

Now, Dr. Dick, at heart, was ardent and comantic; his dreams of love were universal, except that tame sort which comes beckons. Hence the mute proffers of such well rained browsers were unnoticed by him. And, indeed, his reverles at the present sufficed for reality. When he smoked at night in his easy chair, before the cheery hearth, he could see the tender eyes of his ideal in the glow and could well nigh feel the stroke of her little hand in the heart's soothing vibrations. Such imaginary companionship was very grateful after the labors and worries of the day, and then, by the time his pipe was exhausted and the embers were teaching the melancholy of all fervor, how exceedingly deepy he had become!

Then his recreations, though dimly shared, were keenly appreciated by Dr. Dick. There was the club, of which he was a founder, and a perpetual member of the house committee. Its list afforded as many various types of comradeship as it did of good fel-lows. Besides, every month or so he was called on important business to the me-tropolis, which exigency, in truth, consisted of his yearning for some old college friends there divergently engaged in clamber. Parnassus, and of their yearning for him. clambering It happened, one day of such pleasurable outing, that Dr. Dick came dashing down the stairs of his hotel in a tremendous hurry, for it was natural for him to be al-ways behind time and never to give in to the fact. In a word, he was ever doggedly chasing the train of an engagement out rom its station. He was now on his way to a bachelor dinner, which was to adjourn for digestion to the theater. As he reached the bottom step, plunging his hands the while into various pockets in search of what he had forgotten, he discovered that that inevitable something was his handker-chief. As the elavator was old-fashioned. and hence more suave than brisk, he aban doned its wabbling inertia to the impish children haunting the different floors, and, breathless, yet determined, turned about and sped up again toward his room. As if his physical gaze was also fixed, he saw nothing save his impatiently waiting friends. Alas for the proverbial leisure of haste. As Dr. Dick, headlong and heedless, swung around the angle of the corridor, he ran full against a young girl hurrying from the op-posite direction; with such force, too, that despite his confusion he was constrained to recall his professional skill. For an in-stant the maiden lay half unconscious in his arms, while he frantically endeavored to count a pulse, to the fluttering of which his own heart responded. Then she recovered sense and possession at once, and shaking away his grasp stood a little apart, gazing mockingly upon him as he strove to express the thousand apologies which he so poignantly felt. Ah! how could one be col-lected before such a pretty stranger, with such merry gray eyes, so filled with light; with such tantalizing lips, seemingly reluent ripple of blithe laughter lend him its "Pray think no more about it, at length she said. "I feel highly honored, I'm sure, to have been attended by so dis-tinguished a physician. For you must be successful, you know; you have such a pushing way," and again she laughed, and then flitted down the corridor, leaving a haunting echo of merriment behind her And an hour later this jocund unknown was on her way with her parents to her western home, where, doubtless, she re-ceived the homage due to her beauty, met and married the Prince Charming, and lived happily forever after.

But this was not the future that Dr. Dick had arranged for her as he hurried to his appointment; no. indeed, for already had his romantic fancy named him as the guardian of it. Yes, it had come, that great, mysterious love, which had so often fascinated him with half-glimpses in the hearth's chiaro-oscuro; at a single wave of its magic wand his eyes had opened and seen; in one entrancing instant he had passed from existing into living!

"I shall find her," he soliloguized, know I shall. There is a mystic magnetic influence which will guide me more accu-rately than the needle turns to the pole.

At last, at last, have I found my fate!" Poor young doctor, so foolish in thy sapience; through experience thou shalt learn that one does not find one's fate, but is rather found by her whenever she deigns As Dr. Dick sat in the theater box gazing at the stage, but in reality viewing the sharp end of the hotel corridor, after a nervous wont, he fumbled with his watchguard. His fingers caught a strange little object entagled in its meshes, which fur-tive observation revealed to be a golden charm in the shape of an anchor. His companion's absorption allowed him to examine the trinker. On one side was the inscription: "St. Griselda's '93," and on the other the bold original legend, "Hope on, hope ever." "Aha!" murmured Dr. Dick, after the singular, yet veracious, habit of the war-horse, "I have a clew." He had, indeed, and hence was likely to become involved in the labyrinth of false influence. Certain it was that the next day the affable hotel clerk was either Spartan or Beotian in his inability to recognize the fair guest from her admirer's impassioned description, and when at length Dr. Dick returned to Pergamos to resume his round of professional calls, he took with him a heart so heavy with disappointment that his gig creaked and his faithful horse looked back in pained surprise, and yet the little jewel in its own bold and original language bade him to not despair. Its possession was such an advantage, if only he might encounter its owner. It gave him the rights of an ac-quaintanceship which certainly his adventare did not vouchsafe. If only-ah, what a high fence around felicity that little proviso can be; and yet the steadfast of heart may climb and peep and finally gain an unbroken

One Sunday, as Dr. Dick was passing out of church, he caught a glimpse of a face a little in advance which gave to his feet the wings of impatience, instead of the clogs of decorum. Was he dreaming? If not, then there she was, that fair, be witching girl, not smiling, indeed, but even more charming in her sweet seriousness. Dr. Dick pressed forward, until only one obstacle intercepted his pursuit, but this body was bulky and important, with its ewaying galt, and, alas! it was animated by the flery soul of John Knox McPherson, M. D., the exception aforesaid; by that one soul, word, that felt a bitter, unextinguishable hatred toward him.

Dr. Dick cast off impatience and resumed the steady fread of decorum. Too well h knew that his ancient enemy would em brace the most inoffensive chance and squeeze it into a deliberate insult. Were not their relations already sufficiently trained? Besides, this was hardly the strained? He would restrain his arder and hope, sine the "on" and the "ever" seemed so near glorious fruition. The following afternoon, while Dr. Dick and a friend were standing at the club win dow, two ladies passed by one elderly and glowed with assurance. Yes, it must be she; there was the identical blue dress; and could be mistake the outlines of that form or that radiant smile, once more asserting Its superiority over sweet seriousness?

"Who is she?" he gasped.

"Why, old Dame McPherson, of course, answered his friend. "Don't you know

"The wife of my mortal enemy? Pshaw, of course I do, but I mean the other "Why, their daughter, Evelyn, their only child; you must remember her?"
"Yes, as a little girl; but where has she been to grow like that?"

"At boarding school?" repeated Dr. Dick. do tell me where, at once,

"Why, old man," said his friend, in sur-ise, "I'm not a vinegar-nosed spinster. But let me see; yes, she's been at St. Griselda's Female seminary at Hillsdale." Ah, here was confirmation stronger than proofs of holy writ of that ineffably-dear

Why, you act as if you were very much struck," continued the friend. But Dr. Dick said not a word. He turned abruptly away. and, in the deserted smoking room, sough his favorite seat before the hearth. He broke the coals into a joyous blaze, and gazed; but alas, he could not share in the vehemence. He was struck, struck in a beap. To think that this bewildering unknown should prove to be the daughter of his adversary, and such a prejudiced, re-doubtable adversary, too. If he were only a foe of the ordinary sort, then he might well persist, but against that hard, stubborn head, the keenest blade would turn its edge. He remembered her now, oh, yes, the little Evelyn; how had she, indeed, ever passed from his memory, that dear little child, so eager for his word and smile?

In his student days, when her father, that grim, unrelenting one, had been his friend and mentor, she had been a great pet of his. Why had he not realized that five can change fourteen from immaturity into goddesshood? Ah, those old days; there was something incorrectly. was something inexpressibly tender about their memory, after all. Then the one stout champion of his pupilage had been this same Dr. John Knox McPherson, his dead father's friend, his own guardian and tutor. What pride that old man had taken in his success, with what daring hyperboles had he pictured his future! Even how, as Dr. Dick recalled those fierce, irasefule featires, he seemed to see regard peering ou at him, as if from a mask. Oh, the pity of it, that he should ever have become es-tranged from this pugnacious, yet noble nature! But should he blame himself? Come.

let him see: Dr. John Knox McPherson was a Scotch man, typifying to the ends of his fingers the strength, the reason, the frailty and the ab-surdity of his race. He was stout of heart and of intellect, but over-sufficient in his confidence in each. Mankind was generally wrong with one unchanging exception, and hat exception was Dr. John Knox McPhot He was called a doctor of the old school, a title he would have repudiated with scorn, for there was but one school to him, and without it lay the utter darkness of quackery. He had a practice as extensive as his desires in Pergames, for his dress suit and ruffle, his ponderous watch guard, his snuff box and red bandana, the latter of which waved at the snap of the former, exhaled a tonic of confidence in a sick room; but more, and vastly more, too, he was president of the Pergamos Medical school. deed, centered his interests, for here were taught the pure principles of his craft as they had been transmitted through an un-broken line of adepts from Hippocrates even unto himself. For one shut this source of learning McPherson felt the pity, but he who after attendance there dared to seek strange gods was to him Anathema Maranatha, and the abomination of desolation combined and infinitely iten-

It followed, then, when young Richard Burkley, his prime favorite and hope, after graduation had gone abroad, and to Germany, of all places, and had there studied in de spite and contravention of profesional ethics that Dr. McPherson shook the dust of friend-ship off his feet and bestrewed his head with the ashes of hatred. Thereafter Dick was an accursed thing to him, more accursed because reason would often approve of his industry and skill and memory, reflect his nature in soft, pleasing colors. Little wonder then that Dr. Dick had wellnigh forgotten the little girl whom in his tudent days he had so petted and admired little wonder, too, if in this maiden's heart every fond word and deed of his had not only been preserved, but also enhanced. For in rouble, man's panacea is oblivion and voman's remembrance. Just off from the smoking room, separated by heavy curtains, was a small apartment opularly called "the den," for there sundry lerce old members were wont to gather and quarrel over their cups. As Dr. Dick sat reviewing the past and conjuring from it aspirations and passions long since unheeded, there came from this quarter sounds of a wrangle so unusually virulent that perforce he had to listen. 'Of course,' said a voice, oily, insinuating, exasperating, "of course, you boast now so far ahead of the event; but when it comes off and your precious proteges are so much out of the race as to have never been in it why, you will have so thoroughly swallowed your words as to swear you never even chewed them."

'It's a lee,' rasped another voice, tremulous with wrath; "a domned unmannerly lee! I'll bet my head and my boots that a graduate of the Pergamos Medical school takes the prize without half trying. I could name 1,000 fine young men who could do it and let me tell you, sir, when this particular fine young man, whoever he may be, has done it, he can own anything I've got, from a partnership to my daughter's hand in marriage. "My success is due to your instruction said Dr. Dick, adroitly. "All else is "But an idosyncrasy of your confounded

"And now may I hope," continued the young man, "that you will wish to keep your word-'My word! I'll have you to understand, sir-"'From a partnership to my daughter's

"So it's Evelyn you're after, and 'twas not a sneaking fondness for your old pre-ceptor that moved you? Weel, weel! it's natural, I suppose, and the mother says she has ne'er forgotten. But, no secrets out of school, you shall just ask her yourself. A partnership, though—that requires de-liberation. There'll be no potencies, no triturates, will there, now?"

'Nothing later than Galen," asserted Dr. Dick. "Come on then." and a moment later this medical knight was alone in the drawing room with his lady love. How pretty she was, and how altogether desirable in her unfetaned joy!

"I have never changed," Evelyn murmured, in response to his impassioned protestations, "and I have always believed in our constancy." "Ah! well you might," vowed the shame-less Dr. Dick. "Your long absence has been purgatory and the three glimpses I have caught of you since your return revelations of a heaven cruelly denied."

"Poor fellow!" sighed Evelyn. "But it's only twice, isn't it?"

A BROOKLYN SOLOMON. Novel Way of Deciding a Case in a Jus-

Police Justice Watson of Brooklyn emulated King Solomon recently, and was successful to the extent of changing his preconceived judgment, after a practical test of affection. The Brooklyn Solomon placed a child at an equal distance between his two parents and then gave him an opportunity to select for himself. The child, to the justice's surprise, went to his father, and by this act saved him from the penitentiary. The father was John Lewis, of 174 Union avenue, a rough looking cripple, who drags himself painfully along by the aid of crutches. He is not too feeble to be able to take his own part at home, as his wife, Kate, testified. He had words with her and then thrashed her, and she had him arrested. She was very bitter in her com plaint against him when he was arraigned in the Ewen street police court. They had taken their 4-year-old son into court with them, and he did not seem to understand that anything was wrong until his father was taken to the prisoners' pen and his

"The boy knows that she will beat him as soon as she gets him alone out of here. I have worked hard for my wife and child, but she spends on beer all the money I earn, and then she abuses the boy."
"Hold en!" exclaimed the justice; "I want to find out if the child is really afraid of his mother. I'll let him settle this question in a practical way."

placed in the middle of the court room, and said she and her busband could call him so as to determine for which he would show his preference. Lewis kept quiet, while his wife exclaimed in her most dulcet tones: "Come to mamma!" The child whimpered, but did not stir. "Come here, darling," cried Lewis, and he little boy rushed to his arms. ward of 2,000,000 People. We are glad to notice, as an event of iterary importance, says the New York Sun, the recent organization in Providence, R. I., of a Celtic society, the object of which is to revive interest in the mellifluous and influential tongue of Ireland.

No other language, having itself no great masterpiece of literature, has had such effect on modern literature as the Celtic. To it we owe many of the fairy tales of our childhood; some of Shakespeare's plays, ome of the incidents detailed in the Arthurinn poems, even some of these in the divine comedy, are drawn from Celtic sources. It was said of Washington, "Nature made him childless that he might be the father of his country;" so it might almost be said of the Celtic language, "Nature left it child-less that it might be the mother of other literatures."

The Celtic language is not a dead language. One exite of the population of the Emerald iste (in round numbers 890,900 per-sons) understood Erse; 60,600 persons there know no other language than it; one-third of the territory of Ireland is still Cellid, so far as the ability to understand the lan-guage is concerned; and unward of 2,000,000 in this country and Canada are familiar with the tongue.

The path of the new society and its predecessors is uphill; but the ascent has an end. A century ago the Welsh language end. A century ago the Weish language was really in worse case than the Erse is now, but, by the exertions of scholars and the local clergy of Wales, it was rescued, and today is vigorous both in Wales and America. That similar success may await the Celtic assisting of this country in their patriotic labors we sincerely hope.
