This evening com-mittees will be appointed to take the lead in the matter. Among the suggestions that have been made is that the committee on arrangements provide a purse of $150 for a prize drill of military companies, and then invite the companies of Iowa and Nebraska to compete for it. This would have the advantage of interesting the people of out-side towns in the Council Bluffs celebration, and might be of great assistance in swelling

DEFICE - - NO. 12 PEARL STREET | Dr. A. P. Hauchett on Higher Education of Medical Students.

VERY ADVANCED GROUNDS TAKEN BY HIM

Thorough Training Advocated by Him-Facilities Now Offered as Compared with Those of Other Periods in lowa's History.

Dr. A. P. Hanchett of this city, in his annual address as president of the Hahnemann Medical association of Iowa, in session the past week at Cedar Rapids, took quite advanced ground in regard to the preparatory education of medical students. In the course of his address he said: I do feel that a grave mistake is often made in encouraging young people to comnence medical study who should, instead devote possibly several years to prepara tory work. Medicine should be raised to the full dignity of a learned profession. The very lest faculties we possess should be so thoro. hly trained as to be wholly at our command. Higher education has for its chief obje * the systematic and com-plete development of the mind, the placing of one in possession of nimself. It is not o much the text book knowledge acquired so much the text book knowledge acquired in college, or elsewhere, that makes the school as it is mental discipline, the systematic training that comes with it, and is produced by it, and it is just this that the student of medicine should have. He can, thus equipped, enter upon his professional duties with a certainty of success. With the facilities now offered in this grand country for obtaining such a training, and with a due sense of the responsibilities assumed by those entering this profession, all should be willing, yes anxious, to go to any extent of care and effort in the matter of thorough qualification. I would, therefore, suggest that the work of reform commence right in the office of every practitioner in Iowa, yes America; that we refuse to receive students who have not had proper training, and that the only sufficient evidence of such training should be a degree from some reputable only sufficient evidence of such training should be a degree from some reputable offere or university.

Last evening, being the Sunday before Decoration day, was the time for the inate patriotism of the various military orders in Council Bluffs to manifest itself by going to church. Several of the churches of the city were thrown open to them, and special services were held appropriate to the occa sion. The Union Veteran Legion, Dodge Light guards and High school cadets went to the Broadway Methodist church, where the memorial services were held in honor of the departed members of the legion. In accordance with the time honored custom the vacant chairs of the deceased members were draped in black. W. H. Spera de-livered his past commander's address and Colonel D. B. Daily made a speech on the subject of "The Women of the War." General remarks were made by Rev. H. P. Dudy. The church was packed to the doors. At the Christian tabernacle there was another large crowd, the Grand Army of the Republic being in attendance, together with the Woman's Relief corps. Rev. E. W. Allen made some impressive and appropriate remarks. At the First Baptist church Rev. J. H. Davis spoke before the Patriotic Orders of Sons and Daughters of America.

The Cuticle of a Thirty-Year-Old Now a Part of Correct Neckwear. Just several shades removed from the chameleon fad is the idea of wearing snake skins for neckties, but the fashion is growing in Baltimore. It promises to become quite the proper caper to be seen in immaculate morning suit of the latest London cut, with the tanned cuticle of a three-foot reptile neatly tied around the snowy "choker" collar, or whatever other style of linen neckwear happens to be the rage. The fad will never become generally violent, says the New York Recorder, for fine snake skins come high, and the crop may thin out so as to let the West Virginians, who make a business of catching the possessors of variegated outer coverings, create a corner in the market and coin a fortune. To be in he swim nowadays and have the swagger thing in neckties a Baltimore man must not only wear a snakeskin, but the cuticle of a "rattler" of about 30 years of age. The peculiar color of the rattler when he has passed in his checks and gone to snake ceestial spheres, is what makes the skin more valuable than when his fangs are still doing the poison business at the old stand. The necktie must be that of a snake of age, standing and family, for a young scion of the house of rattlers doesn't seem to pos sess all of the qualifications as to color and durability of hide the head of the house can lay claim to. Presumably it's because a snake of three decades or so has been through all of the different kinds of dissipation known to the reptile world, and his physical hide is cognizant of no more comounction than his moral nature. Then an old rattler is generally larger than a young chap, and a tie about a yard in length is bound to bring more in the market than a whipper-snapper snake could show before he reaches his majority. No other kind of a snake indigenous to this section of the coun try would answer the purpose half as well as a rattler, because but few varieties at-tain his length and Falstaffian girth, except the copperhead and black snake, and their colors, while brilliant enough during life, are not of the right shade after the tanner has had his innings. A copperhead skin assumes too much of a dull brown to narmonize with odd ideas in neckwear, and the black fellow—well, his hide might answer for a seedy individual's mourning tie, but nothing else. The rattler's color when all the fight has been taken out of him and his remains have been subjected to the process that prepares them for men's furnishing use, is something on the very dull gold or ecru order. The black rings show distinctly and they lend the odd effects that has so captivated the swells. Then when a back and lining have been put on the skin the tie is ready for use, but they are worth an even $3 any day, counting $2.50 for the skin, which is the average price of a rattler of thirty years' standing, including all the trouble, the catcher and tanner combined have had to take.

GENERAL KETCHUM'S PET.

Heading Off a Veto of a Public Building Bill.

Among his many admirable qualities, says the Washington Post, Congressman Dunphy is a charming story teller, and many a midnight supper at Chamberlain's has been enlivened by his charming stories, apropos of which is the following:

In the Fifty-first congress Mr. Dunphy had for his neighbors both tenants of the Cherokee Strip and General Ketchum of New York, who represented, among other interesting communities, the city of Hudson. It had been the general's custom during the many years of public service as congressman to introduce, and uniformly fall to pass, a certain bill appro-priating $300,000 for the erection of a pub-lic building at Hudson. This measure was one ewe lamb and he went back to his constituency year after year sad at heart at its repeated failure to become a law. But at last, in the Flfty-first congress, he steered the bill safely through all the dangerous shoals and currents, and finally it had actually passed both houses of congress. The general was in an ecstacy. He had gained the crown of his ambition. But just when his felicitations were liveliest he began to hear disagreeable umors of an impediment at the white house and one day he leaned over his seat toward Mr. Dunphy, and, "Dunphy," he said, in his shrill, tenor whisper, "do you know, Dunphy, that I believe the old man's a-goin' to veto that there hill o' mine?"

that there bill o' mine?" exclaimed Dunphy, incredulously, "you don't sny?"
"Yes, I do, Dunphy, I think he's a-goin' to

"Who says so?"
"Well, a lot of them fellows who all the time knows things."
"Well, why don't you go see him?"

"That's what I'm goin' to do." The next morning the general arrived at the house late, and with an expression of countenance lugubrious if not exactly tragic. "Well, general, have you seen him asked Dunphy.
"No," said the general, shortly. "Why, not?"

"Well, I went up there, an' I see Halford, an' I says, s'I, 'Lige,' s'I, 'what's a-goin' to happen to my bill?' s'I. He says, s'he, 'I'm feared it's struck a snag,' s'he. 'What for?' s'I. 'Dunno,' s'he. 'Well,' s'I, 'I want for?' s'I. 'Dunno,' s'he. 'Well,' s'I. ' to see Harrison, an' talk it over,' s'I can't see him.' s'he. Well, I thought a bit, an' I says, s'I, 'Good Gawd,' s'I, 'he h'ant got that small, has he?'"

OTTO'S COLONY OF WHEELS.

The King of Bavaria a Prey of Whirling Motions,

Dispatches announce that the upper house of Bavarla has decided to depose the insane King Otto and install Prince Luitpold, who is acting as regent at present. Otto's mental condition is dark and terrible. He lives since his accession, as he had lived before, shut up in the small palace of Furstenreid about two hours distant from Munich. Of late years his malady has taken the form of stupor, though there are still occasional outbreaks of violence. There was from the beginning no prospect of recovery or even of improvement in his case, although it was foreseen that his merely animal existence might continue for a long time. He occu-pies a suite of apartments on the ground floor, the doors of which, as well as the out side door leading into the garden, are always left open in the daytime, as a closed doo immediately excites his rage. He seems suspicious of restraint, and his attendants conceal as much as possible an appearance of authority over his movements. Once he broke all the front windows of his apartments, and since then the glass has protected by wire, and otherwise there is othing to indicate that a lunatic inhabits the premises. The rooms are handsomely furnished, and everything that can amuse th patient is promptly supplied.

The king is always dressed in black. His beard is very long and thick, and he will not allow it to be trimmed. He often washes his face and hands, but can seldom be persuaded to take a full bath. He is extremely fond of cigarettes and smokes about thereby fond of cigarettes and smokes about thirty a day—enough in itself to make him crazy and keep him so. Every time he lights a cigarette he burns a whole box of matches, and seems to enjoy the noise and flame. He often walks out in the park, but is very unwilling to drive out, probably be-cause it annoys him to be looked at by the people in the road. The sensational reports which appear occasionally in the pa-pers concerning King Otto are for the most part false. The truth is, he has no marked desire for anything. His gaze is generally fixed on vacancy, and he does not appear to recognize even his servants, excepting an old woman who has charge of the silver. He has known her all his life; she used to carry him in her arms when he was a baby, and it is touching to see how the last faint rays of his fading intelligence rests on her alone. When he sees her he calls her name in a loud tone, and orders her to bring him a glass of beer, or whatever he may happen to think of, but he soon forgets what he has said and relapses into his usual state of apathy.
Two of the most prominent physicians of Munich are in attendance on alternate weeks, and every Sunday the director of the insane asylum visits the palace to examine him and make the medical report. At rare intervals the king speaks coherently to his attendants, and it is said that soon after his accession to the throne he remarked to a lackey, "Henceforth you must address me as your majesty." But this story does not appear to be well founded, and it is certain when Princess Theresa went from th death-bed of the queen-mother to apprise the son of his loss, he showed no signs of con prenension, and was unmoved by the grief of the princess, whose tears were doubtless more for the living than for the dead. Although King Otto is unable to recognize his relatives, attendants for friends, and remains for hours motionless in his padded room, he has lucid intervals. Not a great while ago, he suddenly recognized his attendants and became cognizant of his lofty position. A cavalier about the castle asked him if he did not wish to show himself to his subjects in Munich. "Gladly, gladly, would I go to Munich," he replied, with a look of irrepressible sadness in his eyes, "but my people wish to see a well king, and I am sick. Yes, yes, yes, I am sick, and these terrible fancies will not leave ma." will not leave me."

Upon another occasion he demanded sud-denly that his attendants take him to his capital. In order to avoid an attack of vioexcitement, probably in case of a fusal, a court carriage was summoned to the easile steps. The king, one of the phy sicians, and an attendant clad in roya livery, to avoid suspicion, entered the coach, which started on its journey. Looking out of the window, the king saw a meadow almost covered with variously hued flowers. He expressed a desire to gather a bouquet to present to his mother, and the coachman stopped while he plucked the flowers. But the work was too tiring, and he returned to the carriage completely exhausted. He was taken back to the castle and placed in bed. When he awoke the following morning his reason was again clouded, and he had en-tirely forgot the journey to Munich.

But it Was the Breath of Experience Which

Blew Oger Its Surface. "Been at home visiting the folks," said the young man to the New York Herald reporter. "Well, I didn't stay long, for the people of Maine object to drinking, and my habits are not strictly temperate."

"Got a jag," observed the reporter.
"Not at all, sir. I don't drink anything but water. It was my first glass of water at home which got me in trouble. You know that my father is a strict teetotaler. Never drank even a mug of cider. Well, I used to be that way myself. I went home after an absence of three years. Arrived at the old house at dinner time. the old china and silver had been brough out in my honor, and there was a Maine dinner about to be served that would have made many a housewife envious to see. "I trust, Richard, said father, that it all the years you have been from home you have not touched that which brings sor row to so many homes, deprives the poor man's fumily of bread and sows broadcast Important campaigns and battles and noting how they are treated. The Century War Book is not simply a picture book (although it is the most superbly lilustrated work on the war ever issued; nor is it the story of the battles told by any one man, but it is the One History of the World's Greatest War told by the Leading Generals on Both Sides,
