The facts in the case are that Miller was in Sloux City on business and ran short of money. He drew a draft on the Omaha house for a remittance, and went to J. F. Phelan, a dry goods merchant there, and requested him to endorse the draft. Phelan did so and it was forwarded to the Omaha The money was obtained by Miller house. at Sloux City, but the firm in this city, hearing that Miller was intoxicated and had been so for several days, did not at once honor it. Phelan became alarmed concerning the money. In the meantime Miller came here. Phelan then caused his arrest

Miller was asked about the case, and said the facts stated were true; that he had been drunk several days, and that it was been drunk several cays, and that it was owing to this that his firm did not at once honor the draft. He said, however, that now the amount had been made good by his firm, and he believed that while he would likely have to return to Sloux City, prosecution would not follow.

and Louis Schields against John A. Horbach was stirred up again yesterday by the plaintiffs filing a reply in the office of the clerk of the district court, and, besides setting up new matter, they deny all that is alleged in the answer of the defendant.

The origin of this legal fight dates back to the days when the Indians and buffalo roamed in the vicinity of the city hall, while the law suit itself is almost old enough to vote. The fight is over the right and title of a tract of three and one-half acres of ground, not far from the heart of the city, and to this tract all of the contesting parties lay claim. The defendant maintains that it came into his possession via the purchase route, while the plaintiffs declare that they got it with money earned by the sweat of the brow.

In the reply filed the wife of Louis Schleids alleges that in 1864 her husband purchased the tract from Horbach for the sum of $1,600, agreeing to pay for the same in labor. She alleges that he took a conin labor. She alleges that he took a con-tract and that soon thereafter he commenced work for Horbach, building the house which now stands at Seventeenth and Douglas now stands at Seventeenth and Douglas streets, and in which Horbach resides. The agreement, she avers, was that the wages for working on this building were to apply on the purchase price of the land, and were so applied. After that, the wife alleges, her husband worked for Horbach, earning enough to square up the debt, but there was trouble along in 1873. About this time, she alleges that her husband commenced to tarry around the wine cup and one day when he was loaded to the guards he was an-

he was loaded to the guards he was ap-proached by Horbach, who succeeded in getting the contract of purchase and giving a lease for the term of one year in its stead. Soon after that Dorothy Schields avers that she and her husband were ejected from the premises. Louis Schields, the husband, files an affidavit, in which he corroborates all that his wife has said. John Horbach, the defendant, in his answer makes a general denial and shows that he purchased the land in good faith and paid the market price of the same at the time when he got possession. Milk Men Appeal.

Louis L. Littlefield, president of the Omaha Milk Dealers' association, was in the criminal section of the district court yesterday, where he was fined $5 and costs for having fractured the city ordinances, in this, that he sold milk without first having secured a license authorizing him so to do. He appealed to the supreme court, the idea of the members of the as-sociation being to make this a test case. In going to the higher court, they contend that the city has no authority to tax the selling of milk, the grounds being that it is class legislation, and also that it is against
